

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

BT
741
.B8

THE SOUL;

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO SCRIPTURAL PSYCHOLOGY,

AS DEVELOPED BY

THE USE OF THE TERMS, SOUL, SPIRIT, LIFE, ETC.,

VIEWED IN ITS BEARINGS ON

THE DOCTRINE OF THE RESURRECTION.

By GEORGE BUSH,

PROFESSOR OF HEBREW IN THE NEW-YORK CITY UNIVERSITY.

NEW-YORK:
J. S. REDFIELD, CLINTON HALL.

1845.

ENTERED, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1845, by GEORGE BUSH, at the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New-York.

Oct. 1874.
Wm. F. D. [illegible]

P R E F A C E .

THE present work has grown, by a very natural sequence, out of the farther investigations to which I have been prompted by the tenor of several elaborate critiques on the volume recently given to the world under the title of "Anastasis," or the Resurrection of the Body considered. So far as that work could be considered as propounding a distinct theory of the Resurrection, it is that of a spiritual, or rather psychical, body developed, by a natural law, from the material body at death. To establish this position is the drift of that portion of the volume embraced under the head of "The Rational Argument." The position itself, if founded on a solid basis, obviously strikes at the root of the prevalent notions on the general subject; for if a spiritual body be actually assumed by every individual upon his abandonment of the material body, there is plainly a very troublesome incongruity in the idea of the soul's receiving still another spiritual body at what is called the last day, or the era of the final consummation. Accordingly it is upon this part of the argument that the main force of the rebutting criticism has spent itself. The reviewers, as by common consent, have selected this as the one grand point of assault, and aimed to show that there was an entire lack of proof of the existence of any such psychical element in our being which, as a tertium quid between the spirit and the gross material body, could be regarded in any sense as a vehiculum animæ, or ethereal corporeity for the inner intellectual and moral principle which forms the ipseity, selfhood, or essential hypostasis of the man.

This line of argument urged, as it has been, with great vehemence from several quarters, has naturally led to a fuller examination of the grounds on which the offending theory was originally propounded. In the work itself it was put forth as an alternative theory; that is to say, as the necessary result of a chain of reasoning which, if sound, went to set aside the established belief of the reconstruction, in some sense, of the perished body tenanted by the soul during its earthly life. As there is clearly to be a resurrection after death—as something must rise and live again in another world—and as I have assumed to show that that something is not the body which is deposited in the grave—I was obviously called upon to designate affirmatively what it is. This I have stated to be a psychical body eliminated at death from the material body, the essential nature of which, however, I do not hold it incumbent upon me to define, inasmuch as all parties are alike ignorant of the ontological attributes of the psyche ($\psi\chi\eta$), which at the same time all parties alike acknowledge to exist. The extent of my position is, that the psychical body, whatever be its essential nature, is assumed at death, and not at some indefinitely future period. In support of this hypothesis I relied rather upon physiological and psychological considerations, than upon the direct testimony of Scripture.

In consequence, however, of the stern arraignment, at the bar of the pulpit and the press, of the view propounded, I have been led to a closer investigation of its merits as submitted to the test of Scripture, and in the ensuing pages have planted my defence of it not solely upon a rational but upon a strictly exegetical basis. What was before suggested is here affirmed. I claim to have shown, by a rigid and unimpeachable process of interpretation, that the inspired oracles unequivocally recognize the tripartite distinction of man's nature into spirit, soul, and body—that when the body is forsaken at death the spiritual and the psychical elements survive in coexistence together and constitute the true man, which in actual usage is commonly designated by the single term soul—that inasmuch as the psychical principle, even in the present life, is the true seat and subject of what are commonly called bodily sensations, this principle is legitimately to be regarded as performing the same office for the spirit in the other life; or in other words, that the soul necessarily involves the idea conveyed by the phrase spiritual body—and, finally, that the fact of the immediate possession of such a body after death precludes the hypothesis of the investiture of the spirit at any future period, with any other corporeity derived from the relics, however formed or fashioned, of the present material body. These are the points which I profess to establish by the course of reasoning pursued in the present essay. The soundness of the conclusions must evidently depend upon the soundness of the premises. If I have given a wrong interpretation of the language of Scripture, it can doubtless be shown by confronting it with the right; and I must be allowed to demand that whoever assumes the work of refutation he shall not content himself with a bare negation of results, and especially that he shall not think to overwhelm the argument by the violent outcry of Rationalism, Neologism, or Infidelity, as characterizing the principles of exegesis which bring out these results. It is simply a question of sound or unsound interpretation, and I do not hesitate to affirm that even on the supposition that I may have erred in my exegesis, there is still so much of plausibility and probability in the senses assigned to the inspired language, that it is impossible for any one justly to maintain that an honest and truth-loving mind could not have adopted them without giving occasion for doubt as to the moral state of the inner man in so doing. And yet what but the moral character of a false interpretation can render it a fit subject of rebuke and reprobation? And from what is its moral character derived but from the moral state of its author, especially when his opinions concern a fundamental doctrine of Revelation? There are doubtless some very nice questions to be settled under this head. We are constrained to believe that there is nothing that can justify a severe denunciation of the canons of exegesis which conduct to conclusions at variance with established belief upon important doctrines of religion, but the virtual assumption that a certain moral posture of the mind will not fail to see revealed truth in a certain light, and the fact of its not being seen in this light is prima facie evidence that that condition is wanting. This rule of judgment, it is true, is seldom distinctly asserted. But we see not but it must be inwardly held and acted upon in order to warrant the hard measure which is often dealt out to so-styled errant opinions. At any rate, if the soundness of the principle is not actually recognized, that a book is a fair exponent of the man, it would seem that there was a just requisition for the avowal of some principle under the tutelage of which the stern procedure above alluded to towards the propagators of alleged intellectual errors should be vindicated. Meanwhile I venture for myself to continue a straightforward course of biblical inquiry. and to give to the world, under the general prompting of such motives as seem to me to become a Christian, the conclusions at which I arrive from the evidence that forces itself upon my mind. If valid, they will probably approve themselves to those who may think them worthy their attention. If fallacious, the exposure of the error is but the penalty that every sensible man is prepared to pay for the possibility of error in the free expression of his opinions.

G. B.

New-York, August, 1845.

CONTENTS.

	Page.
PRELIMINARY REMARKS,	9
CHAP. I. Scriptural Distinction between Soul and Body,	20
CHAP. II. Import of Original Scriptural Terms for Soul,	23
§ 1. נֶפֶשׁ (nephesh), ψυχή (psuche), Anima, Soul, Life,	23
§ 2. נֶפֶשׁ in the sense of Living Creature with the uniform Accompaniment of חַיִּים,	28
§ 3. נֶפֶשׁ in the sense of Life, ψυχή, Anima, the Vital Principle by which the Body lives,	30
§ 4. נֶפֶשׁ as the Seat of Sensation, the Subject of Bodily Appetites, Desires, and the various kinds of Sensual or Animal Affections,	38
§ 5. נֶפֶשׁ in the sense of Animus, Rational Soul, Mind, and considered as the Séat of vari- ous Passions, Emotions, the Affections per- taining to a Rational Being, such as Love, Joy, Fear, Sorrow, Hope, Hatred, Revenge, Contempt, &c.,	41
§ 6. נֶפֶשׁ in the sense of Person,	46
§ 7. נֶפֶשׁ in the sense of One's Self, or the interior and ground element of his being, the Per- sonal Hypostasis,	56
§ 8. נֶפֶשׁ in the sense of Dead Body,	62
CHAP. III. Import of Original Scriptural Terms for Spirit,	65
§ 1. רוּחַ (ruahh), πνεῦμα (pneuma), Spirit,	65
§ 2. רוּחַ in the sense of Breath,	67
§ 3. רוּחַ in the sense of Wind, ἄνεμος,	69

CONTENTS.

§ 4. רִיחַ in the sense of Anima, ψυχή, Animal Life, Vital Spirit, or the Principle of Life as embodied and manifested in the Breath of the Mouth and Nostrils,	71
§ 5. רִיחַ in the sense of Animus, πνεῦμα, Spirit, the Mind, viewed as the Seat and Subject of Thought, but more especially of Emotion, Feeling, Passion, and Affection,	73
§ 6. רִיחַ in the sense of a Spirit, a Personal Agent, whether good or bad, whether spoken of Angels, Demons, or Men,	84
IV. נְשָׁמָה (neshamáh), πνοή (pnoē), Breath, Spirit,	98
§ 1. נְשָׁמָה in the sense of Breath,	98
§ 2. נְשָׁמָה in the sense of Mind, the Intelligent Principle,	99
V. לֵב (lēb), καρδία (kardia), Heart,	100
§ 1. לֵב in the sense of Heart as a Physical Organ of the Body,	101
§ 2. לֵב in the sense of Mind, Understanding, Wisdom, the Faculty of Thinking, &c.,	103
§ 3. לֵב as denoting the Principle which is the Seat and Subject of Sensations, Feelings, Emotions, and Passions of various kinds, as Love, Joy, Confidence, Hope, Hatred, Contempt, Sorrow, Despair, &c.,	105
VI. General Results,	107
VII. Conflicting Views of the Resurrection,	133

THE SOUL.

Preliminary Remarks.

ANTHROPOLOGY is the appropriated term for the science of man. Its two grand divisions, founded upon the twofold distinction of man's nature, are physiology and psychology, the first relating to the body, the second to the soul. Man, in both these departments, is a proper theme of scientific research. The phenomena of his being, the laws of his animal and intellectual economy, constitute a field of inquiry which lies open to the freest investigation. The exhibitions of divine power and wisdom and benignity which shine forth in the human frame draw largely upon our devout admiration, and are among the thousand-fold works of the Almighty Architect which are diligently "sought out of all them that have pleasure therein." Man is a microcosm involving a miniature universe of wonders, the complete development of which is the work of ages. It is possible, however, to certify the results of our inquiries in this department to a given point, and when this point is attained, whatever it be, it is impossible to say that we may not advance beyond it to another, and thence to another still, and so on indefinitely, in continual approximation to a perfect knowledge of the structure of our bodies and our souls. The presumption is not in saying, "Thus far have we come," but in saying, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther;" for it is not in the compass of human intelligence to set limits to the possible extent of acquisition in our knowledge of any and every part of God's works. As the field is boundless, so the progress in it is interminable. Nor does the fact of a Revelation having been accorded us put any bar in the way of our profoundest inquest, on the ground of Reason, into the great truths which form its themes. The nature, state, and destiny of man enter largely into the disclosures of holy writ; but why should this prevent the prosecution of our researches, by the independent lights which God has given us, into the internal constitution of the bodies and souls of which we find ourselves possessed? Is there any danger that we shall by and by reach a point where Reason and Revelation will come into inevitable conflict? How can this be, if Reason and Revelation acknowledge the same divine source? Is not the universe itself a Revelation of its Author,—a Revelation made to the Reason of intelligent beings,—and is it conceivable that the disclosures it contains should be in any way at variance with the sense of a written record announcing a portion of the very truths which the universe comprises? We are far, indeed, from affirming that unassisted Reason can grasp all the verities which may be supposed to enter into a Revelation from God. But so far as Revelation and Reason cover a common ground, the last inductions of the one must necessarily harmonize with the true-meant averments of the other; and the only question that can arise is as to the certainty of the results of the latter, and the true interpretation of the former.

There are doubtless cases where the apparently irresistible conclusions of science do conflict with the apparently obvious sense of Scripture, so that there seems no alternative but that the one must give way before the more imperative claims of the other. The results of Astronomical and Geological science present a case in point. Now what shall be done in an emergency like this? The evidence of the truth in both these departments is so absolutely decisive and overwhelming, that the mind which appreciates it feels that it would be guilty of doing a moral violence to its higher instincts to reject it, and one upon which God himself would frown. And this conviction, be it observed, often bears down in all its force upon minds penetrated with the deepest reverence for the inspired volume, and who would not hesitate a moment to discard their clearest rational deductions were they inwardly assured, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that the verity of the sense of Revelation perfectly agreed with the import of the letter. But here they are compelled to pause. Here they are met by certain questions which it is impossible for them to put away. They cannot avoid an inquiry into the principles on which a divine Revelation is to be interpreted, and these principles, they are convinced, must be determined by the leading scope and design with which such a Revelation is given to the world. Is that design such as, in its own nature, will consist with a presentation of natural and scientific phenomena in the language, not always of absolute truth, but of common, popular, and prevailing apprehension? We see not how it can reasonably be questioned, that the scope of the sacred volume is predominantly moral and not scientific. It does not profess, therefore, to lay open the veritable nature of things in those departments which the human mind may explore by the lighted candle of its own intelligence. Speaking in order to be understood, it speaks as it could be and would be understood. It takes a multitude of things as facts, because they were then regarded as facts, and yet all along makes a tacit allowance for the rectifying results of deeper insight and wider discovery. If then in the progress of inquiry we reach such results, why shall we not abide by them? And what disparagement is cast upon Revelation if, holding its oracles sacred in the moral sphere which it professes to occupy, we still make the ascertained facts of science and philosophy the criterion by which its true sense on those subjects is to be determined? All the appointments of God are honored in proportion as they are regarded in reference to their true end and design. If they are deflected, in our application of them, from their controlling purpose, we honor them no more than if we neglected them altogether. We repeat then that no contemptuous disrespect of Revelation is chargeable upon the man of science when he obeys the laws of sound reason in adhering to conclusions forced upon him by the incontestable facts of any field of research. Are the asserted facts real facts? This is the only question. If they are, it is impossible they should be contravened by the sense of Scripture, whatever may be made of the letter.

This train of remark applies in all its force to the subject of our present investigation. We believe it is possible to come, through the use of appropriate media, to such a knowledge of the physical and psychical constitution of man, as shall actually force upon us certain conclusions as to the conditions of his future being which cannot be resisted. But the page of inspiration deals expressly with the destiny of man in another life, and it cannot be questioned, that the letter of its statements does in some instances convey a meaning to the mind which is at variance with what we firmly believe to be the absolute truth on this head. Guided by the sense which floats, as it were, on the surface of Scripture, we should no doubt most naturally receive the impression, that that part of our compound being which we call the soul, went forth at death in a purely disembodied state, and so remained for an indefinite tract of ages, till at the period denominated the last day—the day of judgment—the day of the resurrection—the day of Christ's second advent—the final consummation, including the physical catastrophe of the globe—the perished body should again be raised, and the long exiled soul again restored to its former tenement, thenceforth to sojourn in it forever. Now we are for ourselves fully persuaded that every item in this scheme of Eschatology is utterly erroneous, baseless, and delusive. In regard to most of them we believe that they are even directly at war with the most fair and legitimate teaching of the letter of the sacred record, and those which are not, are irreconcilably contrary to its genuine sense. On the one hand, we confidently deny, that a sound philological exegesis can adduce any satisfactory evidence of such a revealed event as is popularly understood by the "end of the world," implying its physical conflagration or termination in any way whatever. The attempt to do this will inevitably bring the predictions of Isaiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, John, and our Lord himself, into such fatal collision, that the authority of one or the other is effectually annulled. They cannot all stand without standing in direct antagonism with each other. Upon this ground alone, if there were no other, we should be prepared to deny that the common views of the Resurrection could be correct. There is no place for it at the end of the world, because there is no end of the world revealed.

On the other hand, we are equally firm in the belief, that the scientific survey of man, considered physiologically and psychologically, brings us irresistibly to the inference, that whatever be the true mode of his existence after death, it is entered upon at once, and that the idea of the future reunion of these constituent elements of his being is entirely gratuitous and nugatory. The grounds of this induction, however, it is not our present purpose to recite at length. Assuming it for granted—what no one will deny—that man, during his life, is made up of body and soul, and that at death his body remains behind and turns to corruption, while his soul issues forth undying into the world of spirits, the facts of the case, sustained by the analogies of nature, would inevitably lead to the inference, that the body would never live again in connexion with the soul, were it not for the apprehended import of Revelation, which is usually understood to assert such a future resuscitation and reunion. As we believe this natural inference to be the true one, notwithstanding the apparent contrary teaching of Scripture, our object in what follows in the present essay will be to show, that there is nothing in the language of the sacred writers in respect to the soul, spirit, mind, or whatever the immaterial and immortal part of man may be termed, which, rightly interpreted, conflicts with this view, or which soundly favors the belief, on this subject, that has become established in the current theology of Christendom.

But it will naturally be asked how the belief became so generally established, and how has it so long held its ground, if there really be no adequate support for it in the word of Inspiration? The solution, we conceive, is to be sought in the fact, that the phraseology employed by Christ and the apostles is drawn, for the most part, from the phenomena of life and death as they strike the outward senses, and have relation to the body. It is the body alone which comes under the cognizance of the senses. A living man is, in ordinary parlance, a man living in a body. A dead man is a man whose body has become defunct. The necessities of language enforce this mode of speech more or less in all ages, and in the face of higher knowledge; still more unavoidable was it in the circumstances under which the Scriptural revelation was imparted to the world. The great truth to be given out was, that man, in the true reality of his manhood, was to live again. In what that manhood essentially consisted might not then be adequately known. The lapse of the ages would pour all requisite light upon it. In the meantime the divine teachers, under the guidance of the Spirit of Truth would not content themselves simply with declaring that the soul should survive the dissolution of the body, for although the term soul actually implies, in sacred usage, all that constitutes the essential person, yet their hearers might have been so far influenced by the subtleties of the philosophers as to have understood by it, in the vaguest sense, a mere thinking principle, a bare intelligent breath, exhaled into the infinite ether, of which it was deemed little else than a component part. This would be an utterly inadequate view of the truth. It is in fact the man, in the full integrity of his being and attributes, that is translated into the world unseen, as we shall hope more clearly to evince in the sequel. And with a view to the fuller intimation of this fact, our Saviour, especially, employs a language which, naturally though not necessarily involving corporeal ideas, would elevate their minds to a more fitting conception of the grand reality.

The train of reasoning by which the non-resurrection of the material body is attempted to be made out we have presented in another volume. This it is not our purpose here to recapitulate. We remain unshaken in the conviction that the common doctrine of the resurrection is alike abhorrent to Revelation and to Reason. We fully believe that, from the necessity of the case, man enters upon his resurrection-state at death, and our present aim is to evince, that nothing can be inferred from the usus loquendi of the sacred writers in regard to the word soul or spirit, adverse to this view.

It will be seen, however, that our argument is rather of a negative than a positive character. We do not assume to disclose affirmatively the precise nature of the spiritual body which is developed at death from the natural body. The extent of our positions is, that that body, whatever be its nature, is assumed when the material body is abandoned; and with a view to this result we endeavor to show, that the term soul, in its legitimate usage, involves the idea of a spiritual body. Still we deem ourselves left uninstructed from this source in regard to the absolute verity. The Scriptures do not speak philosophically on the subject—they do not profess to make us acquainted with the intrinsic nature of the ground-element of human existence. They simply recognize the fact that man is a compound being, corporeal and intellectual, and predicate certain attributes of the one part or the other, according as their particular scope required, and the existence of which the universal consciousness of men would at once assure to them. The possession of a soul and a body, severally distinguished by peculiar properties, is a matter of consciousness and not of reasoning, and the grand purposes of a divine Revelation, require no scientific exposition of the elementary structure of the being to whom it is addressed. In the department of inquiry which we here enter, we must hold, that the conclusions which we should naturally draw from the obvious phenomena of life and death, are to stand good until it can be clearly shown that they are countervailed by opposing evidence, too strong to be resisted, that they are not sound. The issue, therefore, is joined upon the comparative claims of the inductions of Reason and of the letter of Revelation to govern our belief in regard to the verity of things in the field of physiology and pneumatology. For ourselves, we contend that as the human mind is constituted it will and it must abide by the conclusions which it reaches from the evidence of the facts before it. The main facts with which the present discussion has to do, are the facts relating to the connexion of the soul with its material dwelling place, the body. Taking for granted the perpetual flux of the particles which in this life compose our bodies, and their transition after death into innumerable other forms of organized existence, we affirm that their future recomposition into the same bodies, to be inhabited by the same souls, does so much violence to the laws of human belief, that we are perfectly warranted in subjecting to the most rigid ordeal of interpretation those divine announcements which seem to warrant such a conclusion. Nor do we shrink from following out this principle to the utmost extent of its applicability to every asserted fact and doctrine of Revelation. The principle may be adopted in perfect consistency with the admission, that the compass of Revelation embraces disclosures which transcend the highest oracles of Reason, and which it receives simply on the authority of the Revealer, as incontestably taught by the plain sense of the record, and against which Reason has no voice to utter. They are truths lying out of the bounds of her domain, and which consequently she cannot gainsay, when they come authenticated by the unequivocal declaration of Jehovah himself. Here the office of Reason is simply to apply the established laws of interpretation to certain inspired averments, and when their true sense is elicited, reverently to receive them, however much our intelligence may be tasked adequately to comprehend all that may be involved in their import. We receive them because we believe that inspiration means to affirm them, and because, from the nature of the subject, we are unable to adduce from other sources any sufficient grounds for rejecting them.

But the case is wholly different when the enunciations of holy writ respect matters that are not addressed purely to Faith—when, although coming within the sphere of Revelation, they come at the same time within the sphere of our native faculties. On these points Reason speaks and will be heard, and the attempt to stifle its voice is a mistaken mode of honoring Revelation. It is, however, a fair demand on the part of the friends of Revelation, that any alleged deductions of Reason which may appear to conflict with the literal statements of Scripture shall be substantiated by adequate evidence, or evidence that cannot fail to satisfy a calm, reflecting mind on a full view of all the conditions. We do not say it must be of such a nature as shall at once, as soon as stated, immediately command the assent of every intellect to which it is submitted; for there is no doubt that the long established and traditionary sense which has been grafted upon the letter of Scripture does put the mind into an attitude unfavorable to a due estimate of the force of objections urged against that sense. Thus, for instance, in regard to the subject before us, it cannot be questioned that the deep-seated belief that the term resurrection denotes the resurrection of the same body at some indefinitely future period, presents a strong barrier to the admission of the evidence against this, drawn from the conceded facts of the constant flux of particles during life, and their dissipation and re-formation in other unions after death. Yet we do not hesitate to maintain, that in the view of enlightened reason this fact is of itself so imperative against the belief, that it will give way in every mind that yields to its convictions, and when professedly retained, it will be with a latent distrust, and like a weight that is kept up above the surface of the earth by some force that is able for the present to overcome its gravitating tendency.

But we rely not alone on the evidence drawn from this source. We contend that the true constitution of man, physiologically and psychologically viewed, forces upon us the conclusion, that what is termed the spiritual body has no relation whatever to the buried remains of the material body. We deem ourselves prepared to show, that that part of our nature which survives death, and which is termed the soul, fully answers to every just idea which we can form of the body of the resurrection. The proof upon this point constitutes the subject-matter of the present volume. It is drawn from a combined view of the clear results of anthropology, and the equally clear characteristics of sacred philology.

It will, however, be readily inferred from the tenor of our preceding remarks, that the object proposed by our inquiry, under the head of Scriptural Psychology, cannot be the development of a true, formal, scientific system of the soul. It can only be the display of the actual usage of the sacred writers in regard to certain terms which recognize as facts certain principles and properties of our internal nature. We do not mean by this, of course, that the ideas conveyed by the terms may not be strictly true, as far as their import reaches, but that there is a region of truth lying without and beyond the extent of meaning which, in actual usage, they legitimately bear. In the endeavor, therefore, to compass this ulterior truth relating to the soul, we are not to deem ourselves withheld, by the sense which the Scriptures properly attach to the terms, from the affirmation of any more extended sense of them that may be warranted by adequate evidence. Of the degree to which this evidence exists every one must judge for himself. But for ourselves we believe it to be impossible to establish any results of an exegetical character in regard to the prevailing usage of the terms soul and spirit that shall at all conflict with that theory of the resurrection which makes it to imply the development of a spiritual body at death. So far, in fact, as the ascertainable sense of the words bears upon the conditions of existence in another world, we hope to show that the evidence decidedly preponderates in favor of the idea, that the soul is the real man, and that he begins to live at once after death in the full integrity of his true manhood, and this necessarily implies the possession of a spiritual body. But upon this opinion it will be premature to dwell until we have fully exhibited the usage. Upon this we now enter, proposing to take up the several words in succession, and to present such copious illustrations under each as will serve to establish the soundness of the interpretation given.

CHAPTER I.

The Scriptural Distinction of Soul and Body.

THE distinction in man's nature between the two great elements of Soul and Body is so obvious and important that it could scarcely fail to be observed and expressed by appropriate terms in the very infancy of the race and of language. Yet it is remarkable that the biblical Hebrew contains no single word answering, in fixed and definite import, to the Greek σῶμα, the Latin corpus, or the English body. It exhibits eight or ten different terms which are occasionally rendered body, but no one of them has that peculiar appropriated sense which we recognize in the corresponding terms in the languages above mentioned. The ordinary distinctive word for body in Hebrew is בָּשָׂר bâsâr, flesh, the more obvious material of which the body is composed. The verbal form to which this word is lexically referred, especially as illustrated in its linguistic affinities, seems to convey, in its primary import, the idea of fairness, beauty, or perhaps more strictly that of ruddiness or brightness, particularly as evinced in the countenance, as the effect of joyful and exhilarating tidings; whence the verb בִּשַׁעַר bissêr is usually rendered to cheer with glad tidings, to bring or announce good news to any one. The noun, בָּשָׂר, however, is invariably rendered flesh, though quite as frequently perhaps in a metaphorical as in a literal sense, i. e. as equivalent to man's fallen, sinful, and corrupt nature. In this sense it is not related to our present object, nor in its literal sense does it require more than a passing allusion, as our grand aim is to investigate the usage that obtains in regard to the terms designating the soul. The distinction, however, to which we allude is sometimes expressed by "flesh and spirit," and sometimes by "heart and flesh," which is entirely tantamount. In a few instances the entire man is denominated from the flesh as equivalent to the body, as he is in other instances from the soul. Thus, Gen. 2. 24, "They shall be one flesh," i. e. one person. Eccl. 2. 3, "I sought to give myself (Heb. בשרי my flesh) unto wine." The more subtle distinction, familiar in our philosophy, between substances strictly material and immaterial appears not to be expressly recognized in the sacred writings. The passage which comes nearest to it is perhaps Is. 31. 3, "Their horses are flesh and not spirit." That such a distinction is, in the nature of things, well founded, there can be no doubt, though it may be of too subtle a nature for our discrimination, when matter is contemplated in its most tenuous forms.* But we find no evidence that such metaphysical nicety entered into the conceptions of the inspired penmen of the Scriptures.

At the same time we think the remark not superfluous, that in regard to this, as well as many other subjects treated in the sacred volume, a discrimination is to be made between the true-meant and deep-laid sense of the Holy Spirit and the conscious personal sense of the writers in inditing the language employed. Acting as mere amanuenses of the Divine Dictator of the word, nothing is more easily conceivable, than that the meaning which their mind affixed to a multitude of words may have been vastly transcended by the more fundamental import flowing from the depth of the infinite intelligence, which must of course be regarded as compassing all the absolute verities involved in the nature of the themes. It does not seem to be at all necessary to a sound view of inspiration that the sacred writers should have truly understood all the truth which they were commissioned to indite, or in other words, that their sense of the terms they employed should be deemed the measure of the sense of the Holy Ghost. Accordingly, as the absolute truth of the subject matters of the word becomes in time more fully developed by the light of science or the course of providence, we may find that the terms made use of do actually interpret themselves more in accordance with the essential and philosophical verity of things than we can suppose possible of the same words when limited to the narrower sense of the human scribes by whose hands they were penned.— This principle must certainly be admitted in regard to a large portion of the prophetic Scriptures, and we see no reason to question its applicability to the department we are now considering. As the true constitution of man mentally and corporeally becomes more fully unfolded by the progress of physiology and psychology, we cannot doubt that the language of revelation will yield, in great measure, a meaning which, without violence, shall strikingly conform to the actual results of discovery and deduction in this field of inquiry. The justness, however, of this suggestion will probably disclose itself more fully in the process and the close of the philological researches which we have proposed to ourselves, and upon which we enter in a careful investigation of the import of the word soul in its various Scriptural relations.

* "We really know, not wherein the elements of matter consist; and although we are acquainted with some of its properties, we do not know its essence; neither are we sure that it may not possess properties, or assume forms, with which we are unacquainted, and which are too subtle to be recognized by our senses. Hence we do not consider the question of the materiality of the soul as being very important, because what we call spiritual, may, in fact, be an infinitely fine modification of matter, far too subtle to be apprehended by our present powers." Newnham on Reciprocal Influence of Body and Mind, p. 97.

CHAPTER II.

Import of Original Scriptural Terms for Soul.

§ 1.

נֶפֶשׁ (nephesh), ψυχή (psuche), Anima, Soul, Life.

THE current rendering of this term in our English version is soul. But this does not strictly define the word, as soul is very variously used, and the true idea is to be elicited, if at all, from a critical inquest into the genuine purport of its Hebrew original. Lexicography assumes it as a normal derivative from the radical נָפַח náphash, to breathe, to respire, with which coincide the cognates נָשַׁף náshaph, נָשָׁא náshav, נָשָׂם násham, and נָשַׁף sháaph, all of them having the import of breathing or blowing, or in some way conveying the idea of air in motion. The word נֶפֶשׁ, however, is not found in Kal, or the simplest verbal form, but only in Niphal, or the passive in the sense of taking breath, or being refreshed, especially after fatigue. The word in this form occurs only in the three following instances.

Ex. 23. 12, "That the stranger may be refreshed (נֶפֶשׁוֹ. Gr. ἀναψύξει)." "

" 31. 17, "And on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed (נֶפֶשׁוֹ. Gr. ἐπαισάτο)." "

2 Sam. 16. 14, "And the king, and all the people that were with him, came weary, and refreshed themselves there (נֶפֶשׁוֹ. Gr. ἀνεψύξαν ἐκεῖ)." "

The relation between the words is indeed as obvious as that in English between breathe and breath, yet there is every probability that the verb נֶפֶשׁ is a mere denominative formed from the noun נֶפֶשׁ, instead of the reverse of the process being the fact. This is according to a very prevalent analogy in Hebrew, of which copious examples are given in the Grammars of Gesenius and Ewald. Thus we find נָכַר to be born a male, from נָכַר a male; הָשָׁן to remove ashes, from הָשָׁן ashes; נִצָּרַל to show oneself uncircumcised, from נִצָּרַל foreskin. The noun, therefore, we think, is to be regarded as primitive, unless, as Gesenius suggests, it may be formed by transposition of letters from נָשָׁף to breathe, to blow. However this may be, it is not to be questioned that the radical import of the word is breath, as a visible indication of life, in consequence of which the two senses of the word, breath and life, in actual usage, very frequently run into each other, as will be evident from the citations which follow. So far then as soul stands as a correct representative of נֶפֶשׁ it imports in the main the principle of animal life, the vital spirit, as manifested by the breath, but not necessarily including the idea of intellectual faculties, which though occasionally implied in the use of the term in certain connections, is still entirely adventitious to the primitive sense.

The corresponding Greek term $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ comes from $\psi\upsilon\chi\omega$, of which the primary sense is held by lexicographers to be to breathe, to blow, and thence to render cold, to be cool, as an effect of breathing or blowing upon one; and hence by natural transition to refresh. From the primitive sense comes $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$, soul, and from the secondary $\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{o}s$, cold. The dominant import of $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ is undoubtedly life as indicated by the act of breathing, which is the principal visible distinction between a living and a dead animal, and this import it evidently has in numerous instances in which it is translated soul, as will be seen from the citations soon to be given. Yet nothing is clearer than that in this sense $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ is broadly distinguished from another Greek term $\zeta\omega\eta$, which is also rendered by the same English word life, and which is uniformly employed in all such phrases as—"enter into life"—"see life"—"inherit eternal life"—"have eternal life"—"pass from death unto life"—"endure unto everlasting ing life"—"light of life"—"word of life"—"bread of life"—"resurrection of life," &c. In these instances it obviously denotes a higher, more spiritual, more transcendental principle than is indicated by the word ψυχή, which is more strictly applicable to the principle of vitality as connected with animal organization. In John, 12. 25, we meet with both terms in close connection: "He that eateth his life (ψυχήν) in this world, shall keep it unto life ζωήν) eternal." It would be entirely contrary to prevailing analogy to have used ψυχήν in both these clauses. Yet there are a few sporadic cases in which ζωή occurs in the lower sense of mere physical life. Thus, Luke 1. 75, "In holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of our life (ζωήν)." Luke, 16. 25, "Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime ζωή) receivedst thy good things." Acts, 8. 33, "Who shall declare his generation? for his life (ζωή) is taken from the earth." Acts, 17. 25, "Seeing he giveth to all life ζωή), and breath, and all things." Rom. 8. 38, "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life (ζωή), nor angels, nor principalities, &c., shall be able to separate us from the love of God." Comp. 1 Cor. 3. 22. 1 Cor. 15. 19, "If in his life (ζωή) only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." Heb. 7. 3, "Having neither beginning of days nor end of life (ζωή)." Comp. v. 16. These are all the cases, out of one hundred and thirty-two, in which the word occurs in this sense in the New Testament. In the Septuagint it is never employed as a rendering of נַפְשׁ, but almost uniformly of נָפַח life or living. In its true interior sense it conveys the idea of good, enjoyment, happiness, in connection with that of life, and the import of duration is plainly accessory, as it is natural to conceive of that which is living, and as such enjoying, as at the same time enduring, though the ideas are intrinsically separable. Ζωή, therefore, properly denotes the good of existence as flowing directly from God, and carries us up to a higher conception of life than ψυχή, which seems to have a more legitimate reference to the sensitive principle in conjunction with which the true substratum of our being acts and manifests itself. It is in great measure by the ζωή that man is distinguished from the brute creation, which possesses the ψυχὴ but not the ζωή. It is by this also that man is to be supposed preëminently to be conjoined to the Deity, and thus made secure of immortal existence, which is not to be conceived of brutes, because they lack the principle on which it is founded. Now it cannot, we think, be doubted that the phenomena of sensation are effected by means of the ψυχὴ even while connected with and pervading the bodily structure; for it is far from being clear, that the body, strictly speaking, is susceptible of any sensation whatever. A lifeless corpse is organically as perfect as a living body, yet it has no sensation. The sentient power has departed, but we know of nothing that requires the belief that in forsaking the body it loses any of its distinguishing attributes. But this point we shall consider more fully in the sequel.

The corresponding Latin terms for the vital and intellectual part of our nature, animus—anima—spiritus—are also obviously of the same etymological origin, anima being derived from animus, and this from ἄνεμος, wind, while spiritus comes directly from spiro, to breathe, to blow. The Latin, however, has still another word, mens, to which corresponds the English word mind, used in reference to the same subject. These terms signified originally that which knows or understands, and are derived from the root mena, to know, an etymon, which though lost in the European languages, is preserved like many of their common roots, in the Sanskrit, to which is to be traced the Greek μῆναι, he means. The Greek νοῦς, also signifying mind, comes from the γινώσκω, to know.

Our common English word soul is of an origin somewhat difficult to be determined. Grimm (Grammatik, Theil. II. § 99) remarks that the German word for soul, at present seele, was anciently, in the Gothic of the third and fourth centuries, saiu-a-la, from which came in the eighth and ninth centuries seul-a and sela, whence seele, and in the Anglo-Saxon sauv-el (pron. souv-el), from which he thinks flows by easy sequence the English soul. 'The derivation of saivala from saivan, denoting the effect of a violent wind or storm, is highly probable, he observes, although in the ancient monuments we find the word saiu applied only to the waving sea. The word seele might therefore have had originally a double import, as ἄνεμος, viz. that of wind and spirit. (Schubert's Gesch. der Seele, p. 716.)

Nothing is more remarkable than the fact that in all these languages the leading words designating the soul are from roots that have some relation to air, wind, breath. Still this relation is probably to be deemed of a phenomenal rather than of a real character, and founded upon the obvious sensible fact, that breath was the grand criterion of life. The intrinsic nature of the soul is not therefore at all disclosed by the import of the terms used to denote it. This we are left to discover, if possible, by such means as are within our reach. The object of our present inquiry however will be attained even if we should fall short of this.

In attempting a systematic classification of the various senses of the word נַפְשׁ=פְּנֵי=soul, we shall commence with the somewhat peculiar usage that discloses itself in the first instances of its occurrence in the sacred text. In the account of the creation in the first two chapters of Genesis we meet with the frequent use of נַפְשׁ, and always accompanied by חַיִּים living, although, according to Gesenius, this latter word is not an adjective, but a noun, and requiring the phrase to be literally rendered in English by breath of life. But we think the simple idea of breath scarcely comes up to the import of the word in this connexion. It rather denotes, we conceive, the inner, essential, constituent principle in which the life inheres that is indicated by the breath. But it is even in that sense evidently a concrete, and the established version living creature undoubtedly presents very fairly the leading import of the term, especially in reference to the animal tribes to which it is expressly applied. The Greek, however, invariably represents it by ψυχὴ ζῶσα, living soul, and this rendering our translators have adopted, Gen. 2. 7, where the creation of man is spoken of. Yet it is an important fact, which is necessarily lost sight of by the mere English reader, that precisely the same language is employed in reference to the creation of man and of beasts. They were both made ψυχὰι ζῶσαι, living souls. Whatever be the intrinsic nature of the psychical principle, both share it in common—a fact from which some have inferred that beasts are as immortal as man, and others that man is as mortal as beasts. But we shall see in the sequel that one inference is as erroneous as the other. While the ψυχὴ is not in itself immortal, and therefore secures not immortality to its brute possessors, it is made immortal in man by its connexion with the πνεῦμα, or spirit, an element which belongs to the human nature alone. But upon this part of the subject we shall treat more at length in another place. Our present object is to exhibit the usage of—נָפֶשׁ in the sense of Living Creature, with the uniform accompaniment of חַיָּה.

§ 2.

Gen. 1. 20, "Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life (נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה)."

This may be rendered by apposition, and collectively, the living reptile, the living creature; but Rosenmüller prefers the construction by regimen, the swarming reptile of a living soul, i. e. possessed of a living soul; and this is countenanced by the Greek ἐπετα ψυχῶν ζῶων, creeping things of living souls. To the leading sense of the term it is not material which of the readings we adopt, and grammatical canons will warrant either. The idea of life, which is really native to the word, is heightened by the adjunct חַיָּה.

Gen. 1. 21, "And God created great whales, and every living creature (נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה) that moveth."

" 1. 24, "Let the earth bring forth the living creature (נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה) after his kind."

" 1. 30, "To every thing that creepeth, wherein there is life (נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה), I have given," &c.

" 2. 7. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life (נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה breath of lives), and he became a living soul (לֵב נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה)—Gr. εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν."

Here we see that the more appropriate Heb. expression for simple breath is not נֶפֶשׁ, but נְשָׁמָה neshâmâh, which will be considered hereafter, though it is still unquestionable that נֶפֶשׁ is etymologically related to נָשָׁא to breathe or blow. But only a single instance occurs in the biblical text where it is rendered breath, and there it is spoken of God; Job, 41. 13, "His breath (נֶפֶשׁוֹ) kindleth coals." In another passage of Job, ch. 11. 20, it is rendered by ghost, though the margin has breath—"The hope of the wicked shall be as the giving up of the ghost (נֶפֶשׁוֹ מָוֶת, the breathing forth of the life or soul. Marg. a puff of breath)." So also Jer. 15. 9, "She that hath borne seven languisheth, she hath given up the ghost (נֶפֶשׁ)." These passages come the nearest of any that can be specified to the sense of simple breath, and yet they all of them, except Job 11. 13, evidently carry the mind to the deeper idea of life or soul.

Gen. 2. 19, "And whatsoever Adam called any living creature (נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה), that was the name thereof."

" 9. 12, "This is the token of the covenant which I make between me and you, and every living creature (נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה)."

" 9. 16, "That I may remember the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature (נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה)."

§ 3.

נֶפֶשׁ in the sense of Life, ψυχή, Anima, the Vital Principle, by which the Body lives.

The usage under this head prevails very extensively in the sacred writers, and in our version the rendering is interchangeably life and soul, the latter however being the English equivalent more generally adopted. The Greek has almost invariably ψυχή. How much more is legitimately implied in the term than the simple idea of vitality, exclusive of thought and feeling, may no doubt be a matter on which difference of opinion may be entertained. Our object, however, is to present the usage, as a matter of fact, with all the discrimination attainable, while at the same time we are fully aware that many of the passages which we may cite under this head another would refer to another. We can perhaps only hope to approximate to a just classification.

Gen. 9. 4, "But the flesh with the life thereof (בְּנֶפֶשׁוֹ), which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat."

We are not probably to understand this as intended to affirm it as a physiological fact, that the life is pre-eminently seated in the blood, which was formerly held by some physiologists, but is now discarded, but simply as intimating the close connexion between the possession of the due quantity of blood and the possession of life, inasmuch as if the blood be shed the life is gone.

Gen. 9. 5, "And surely your blood of your lives (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם) will I require: at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life (נֶפֶשׁ) of man."

" 19. 17, "Escape for thy life (נַפְשְׁךָ)."

" " 19, "Thou hast magnified thy mercy, . . . in saving my life (נַפְשִׁי)."

" 32. 30, "I have seen God face to face, and my life (נַפְשִׁי) is preserved."

Gen. 35. 18, "And it came to pass as her soul (נַפְשָׁהּ) was in departing."

This might doubtless as properly have been rendered life, which is said to depart at death, though it is nowhere said to expire or become extinct.

" 37. 21, "Let us not kill him (נַפְשׁ—Lit. let us not smite or kill him, soul, i. e. as to his soul or life)."

" 44. 30, "Seeing that his life (נַפְשׁ) is bound up in the child's life (נַפְשׁ)."

Ex. 4. 19, "All the men are dead which sought thy life (נַפְשְׁךָ)."

" 21. 23, "And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life (נַפְשׁ תַּחַת נַפְשׁ)."

" " 30, "For the ransom of his life (נַפְשׁ)."

Lev. 17. 11, "For the life (נַפְשׁ) of the flesh is in the blood."
Comp. v. 14.

" 24. 17, "He that killeth any man (נַפְשׁ אִישׁ—Lit. that smiteth the life of a man)."

" 24. 18, "He that killeth a beast shall make it good: beast for beast (נַפְשׁ חַיָּה תַּחַת נַפְשׁ life for life)."

The established rendering undoubtedly gives the true sense, but it would have been better to have translated according to the letter, as we feel at once the violence of rendering נַפְשׁ by beast.

Num. 35. 31, "Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life (נַפְשׁ) of a murderer."

Deut. 12. 23, "The blood is the life (נַפְשׁ); and thou mayest not eat the life (נַפְשׁ)."

" 19. 6, "Lest the avenger of blood . . . slay him (נַפְשׁ—Lit. smite him as to the life)."

" " Life shall go for life (נַפְשׁ—נַפְשׁ)."

" 22. 26, "As when a man riseth against his neighbor, and slayeth him (נַפְשׁ—Lit. smiteth him as to the life)."

" 24. 6, "For he taketh a man's life (נַפְשׁ) to pledge."

Josh. 2. 13, "Deliver our souls (נַפְשֵׁינוּ) from death," i. e. our lives.

Josh. 2. 14, "Our lives (נַפְשֵׁנוּ) for yours."

" 9. 21, "We were sore afraid of our lives (לְנַפְשֵׁהֶנּוּ), for our lives)." 2

Judg. 5. 18, "A people that jeopardized their lives (נַפְשָׁם) unto death."

" 12. 3, "I put my life (נַפְשִׁי) in my hand."

Ruth, 4. 15, "A restorer of thy life (נַפְשִׁי)."

1 Sam. 19. 5, "For he did put his life (נַפְשֵׁוֹ) in his hand."

" 11, "If thou save not thy life (נַפְשְׁךָ) to-night."

" 22. 23, "He that seeketh my life (נַפְשִׁי) seeketh thy life (נַפְשְׁךָ)."

" 23. 15, "Saul was come out to seek his life (נַפְשֵׁוֹ)."

" 24. 11, "Thou huntest my soul (נַפְשִׁי) to take it,"
i. e. my life. 2

" 26. 21. "Because my soul (נַפְשִׁי) was precious in thine eyes this day," i. e. my life. 2

" 26. 24, "And behold, as thy life (נַפְשְׁךָ) was much set by this day in mine eyes, so let my life (נַפְשִׁי) be much set by in the eyes of the Lord."

" 23. 9, "Wherefore then layest thou a snare for my life (נַפְשִׁי)?" 2

2 Sam. 1. 9, "My life (נַפְשִׁי) is yet whole in me."

" 4. 8, "Behold the head of Ish-bo-sheth . . . which sought thy life (נַפְשְׁךָ)."

" 14. 7, "That we may kill him for the life (בְּנַפְשֵׁוֹ) of his brother whom he slew."

" 16. 11, "Seeketh my life (נַפְשִׁי)."

" 18. 13, "I should have wrought falsehood against my own life (נַפְשִׁי)."

" 19. 5, "Which this day have saved thy life (נַפְשְׁךָ), the lives (נַפְשֵׁם) of thy sons . . . and the lives (נַפְשֵׁם) of thy wives, and the lives (נַפְשֵׁם) of thy concubines."

" 23. 17, "The blood of the men which went in jeopardy of their lives (בְּנַפְשֵׁיהֶם with their lives)." So also 1 Chron. 11. 19.

Kings, 1. 12, "That thou mayest save thine own life (נַפְשׁ), and the life (נַפְשׁ) of thy son Solomon."

2. 23, "If Adonijah have not spoken this word against his own life (נַפְשׁ)."

3. 11, "Nor hast asked the life (נַפְשׁ) of thine enemies."

19. 2, "If I make not thy life (נַפְשׁ) as the life (נַפְשׁ) of one of them."

19. 3, "He arose and went for his life (נַפְשׁ)."

19. 4, "And requested for himself (נַפְשׁ, for his life) that he might die; and said, It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life (נַפְשׁ)."

20. 31, "Peradventure he will save thy life (נַפְשׁ)."

20. 39, "Then shall thy life (נַפְשׁ) be for his life (נַפְשׁ)." So also v. 42. 2 Kings, 10. 24.

ngs, 1. 13, "Let my life (נַפְשׁ) and the life (נַפְשׁ) of these fifty thy servants be precious in thy sight."

So also v. 14.

7. 7, "And fled for their life (נַפְשׁ)."

7. 3, "Let my life (נַפְשׁ) be given me at my petition."

7. 7, "Haman stood up to make request for his life (נַפְשׁ)."

8. 11, "To stand for their lives (נַפְשׁ). So also chap. 9. 16.

2. 4, "All that a man hath will he give for his life (נַפְשׁ)."

2. 6, "Behold, he is in thine hand, but save his life (נַפְשׁ)."

12. 10, "In whose hand is the soul (נַפְשׁ, life) of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind."

31. 39, "Have caused the owners thereof to lose their life (נַפְשׁ)." See a parallel to this, Prov. 1. 19.

15. 4, "Let them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul (נַפְשׁ)."

This passage may stand as the representative of a large number occurring in the Psalms, where the same expression in the original is sometimes rendered by "~~seeking~~ the soul," and sometimes by "seeking the life." The import is undoubtedly to seek the life with a view to ~~destroy~~ it. We would therefore render the phrase uniformly by life instead of soul. In like manner the phrase "laying wait for the soul," we take to be equivalent to "laying wait for the life" with a persecuting or murderous intent. So again, preserving, delivering, redeeming the soul, is, we suppose, to be understood of performing these offices for the life, though it is possible there may be cases of this kind where a higher meaning may be attached to the word soul, and one that shall bring it under a subsequent head.

Prov. 1. 18, "They lurk privily for their own lives (לְנַפְשָׁם)." for their own lives

“ 6. 26, “The adulteress will hunt for the precious life (חַיִּים).”

“ 7.23, “ And knoweth ~~not~~ that it is for his life (בְּנַפְשׁוֹ).”

“ 12. 10, “ A righteous man regardeth the life (חַיִּים) of his beast.”

“ 13. 3, “ He that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life (נפש).”

“ 13. 8, “The ransom of a man's life (נַפְשׁוֹ) are his riches.”

Is. 15. 4, “His life (חַיָּתוֹ) shall be grievous unto him.”

Jer. 21. 9, "His life (נַפְשׁוֹ) shall be unto him for a prey."

So also ch. 38. 18—45.

“ 48. 6, “Flee, save your lives (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם).”

Lam. 2. 12, "When their soul (שֶׁמָּה) was poured out into their mother's bosom," i. e. their life. This is understood by some to be equivalent to the blood.

“ 2. 19, “Lift up thine hands toward him for the life (נַפְשׁ) of thy young children.”

“ 5. 9, “We gat our bread with the peril of our lives (נפֿלֿשנֿי).”

Ezek. 32. 10, "They shall tremble at every moment, every man for his own life (לְנַפְשׁוֹ)."

" 47. 9, "And it shall come to pass that every thing that liveth (כָּל נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה, every soul of life) shall live."

Jon. 1. 14, "Let us not perish for this man's life (נַפְשׁוֹ)."

" 4. 3, "Take, I beseech thee, my life (נַפְשִׁי)."

Mat. 2. 20, "For they are dead which sought the young child's life (ψυχὴν)."

" 10. 39, "He that findeth his life (ψυχὴν) shall lose it; and he that loseth his life (ψυχὴν) for my sake, shall find it." So also ch. 16. 25.

Mr. Barnes remarks upon this passage that "the word life is used in two senses. The meaning may be expressed thus: He that is anxious to secure his temporal life, or his comfort and security here, shall lose eternal life; or shall fail of heaven. He that is willing to lose his comfort and life here, for my sake, shall find everlasting life, or shall be saved." In either case there is a superadded sense of enjoyment, which is frequently to be recognized in the use of the word life, both in the Old Testament and the New.

Mat. 16 26, "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul (ψυχὴν, life), or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul (ψυχὴν, life)?"

In the parallel passage, Luke 9. 25, it is said, "For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away?" The word life or soul, therefore, in this connection must doubtless be taken in the same sense with נַפְשׁ No. 6, implying that which constitutes the ipseity or essential self of a man. This is the highest import of the word soul, and involves more than the simple idea of physical life. There is, therefore, some ground for rendering ψυχή by soul here, though the same term is rendered in the preceding verse by life.

Mat. 20. 28, "Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life (ψυχὴν) a ransom for many." So Mark, 8. 45.

- Mark, 3. 4, "Is it lawful to do good on the Sabbath-days, or to do evil? to save life (ψυχήν), or to kill?"
- Luke, 14. 26, "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life (ψυχήν) also, he cannot be my disciple."
- John, 10. 11, "I am the good shepherd that giveth his life (ψυχήν) for the sheep." So also ch. 10, 15.
- " 13. 37, "I will lay down my life (ψυχήν) for thy sake." So v. 38, and 15. 13.
- Acts, 15. 26, "Men that have hazarded their lives (ψυχάς) for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."
- " 20. 10, "Trouble not yourselves, for his life (ψυχή) is in him."
- " 20. 24, "Neither count I my life (ψυχήν) dear unto myself."
- " 27. 10, "I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives (ψυχῶν)."
- " 27. 22, "There shall be no loss of any man's life (ψυχῆς) among you, but only of the ship."
- Rom. 11. 3, "I am left alone, and they seek my life (ψυχήν)."
- " 16. 4, "Who have for my life (ψυχῆς) laid down their own necks." So 1 John, 3. 16.
- Phil. 2. 30, "For the work of Christ he was nigh unto death, not regarding his life (ψυχή)."
- Rev. 8. 9, "And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea and had life (ψυχάς, souls), died."
- " 12. 11, "And they loved not their lives (ψυχάς) unto the death." This, however, may be rendered souls in the sense of themselves.

The above list of citations contains nearly all the prominent instances to be found in the Old and New Testaments of the use of the word ψυχή, in the sense of life. The passages omitted are mostly repetitions of certain texts that occur in our catalogue. The Greek rendering of ψυχή, we believe is, in every case, $\psi\chi\eta$. The English representative soul occurs in a few instances, but the dominant term is correctly life. The most obvious idea which is to be attached to life in these connexions is simply that of the animal or vital principle by which a living is distinguished from a dead body. As the term is applied equally to men and to beasts, there is no necessary implication, as far as these passages are concerned, of those intellectual and moral attributes usually indicated by the word soul, and which constitute that element of our being of which immortality is more properly predicated. We shall find, indeed, in the classifications that follow, that the word is used extensively in a higher sense and one that involves the import of animus as well as anima, or of the rational faculties peculiar to man as standing at the head of the terrestrial order of creatures. In pursuing, however, the train of development which we have marked out, we encounter a peculiar difficulty in discriminating accurately between the purely intellectual and the emotional or sensitive part of our nature, alluded to in a great variety of texts. That the term in its genuine significance points often to that principle which is the seat of sensation and affection, rather than of intellection, we think is undoubted. Still as these principles co-exist and co-act together by the very constitution of our being, it is not perhaps to be expected that the line which separates their respective spheres should be made, by the sacred writers, very distinctly conspicuous. We can hardly expect, therefore, that the following, or in fact that any, classification can carry with it such ample evidence of its truth as to preclude all doubt. The usage of terms in all languages frequently varies by such nice and imperceptible shades, and, according to the genius of the writer or the scope of the context, their different senses so glide into and blend with each other, that the attempt to discriminate them is like the attempt to mark the precise line of separation between the tints of the rainbow. All that we can aim at is the nearest possible approximation to a correct estimate of the force of the term in question in its different textual relations.

§ 4.

נַפְשׁ as the Seat of Sensation, the Subject of Bodily Appetites, Desires, and the various kinds of Sensual or Animal Affections.

Ex. 15. 9, "My lust (נַפְשִׁי, my soul,) shall be satisfied upon them."

Num. 21. 5, Our soul (נַפְשֵׁינוּ) loatheth this light bread."

Deut. 12. 15, 20, 21, "Whatsoever thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ) lusteth after."

" 12. 20, "Thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ) longeth to eat flesh."

" 14. 16, "Whatsoever thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ) lusteth after, . . . whatsoever thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ) desireth."

" 13. 6, "With all the desire of his mind (לֵבָאֵלָיו)."

" 21. 14, "If thou have no delight in her, thou shalt let her go whither she will (נַפְשָׁהּ, lit. to her soul)."

24. 15, "For he is poor, and setteth his heart (לֵבָאֵלָיו, his soul) upon it."

1 Sam. 2. 16, "Take as much as thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ) desireth."

Job, 6. 7, "The things that my soul (נַפְשִׁי) refused to touch are as my sorrowful meat."

" 24. 12, "And the soul (נַפְשׁ) of the wounded crieth out." That which is the seat of sensation.

" 33. 20, "So that his life abhorreth bread, and his soul (נַפְשׁ) dainty meat."

Ps. 10. 3, "The wicked boasteth of his heart's (לֵבָאֵלָיו) desire."

" 35. 13, "I humbled my soul (נַפְשִׁי) with fasting."

" 69. 1, "Save me, O God; for the waters are come in unto my soul (נַפְשִׁי)." My troubles reach the inmost seat of sensation.

Psalm 78. 18, "They tempted God in their hearts by asking meat for their lust (נַפְשָׁם, for their souls)."

" 105. 18. "Whose ~~feet~~ they hurt with fetters; he was laid in iron (נַפְשׁוֹ בְּרִזְלוֹ בַּאֲזָר, his soul came into iron)."

" 107. 9, "For he satisfieth the longing soul (נַפְשׁ), and filleth the hungry soul (נַפְשׁ) with goodness."

" With bodily blessings.

" 107. 18, "Their soul (נַפְשָׁם) abhorreth all manner of meat."

Prov. 6. 30, "Men do not despise a thief if he steal to satisfy his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ i. e. his appetite) when he is hungry."

" 10. 3, "Thou wilt not suffer the soul (נַפְשׁ) of the righteous to famish."

That this refers to a supply of the temporal wants of the righteous, is obvious from the remaining clause of the verse, "but he casteth away the substance of the wicked."

Prov. 13. 4, "The soul (נַפְשׁ) of the sluggard desireth and hath nothing; but, the soul (נַפְשׁ) of the diligent shall be made fat."

" 13. 25, "The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul (נַפְשׁ)."

" 16. 17, "Pleasant words are as an honey-comb, sweet to the soul (נַפְשׁ), and health to the bones."

" 19. 15, "An idle soul (נַפְשׁ) shall suffer hunger."

" 22. 23, "For the Lord will plead their cause, and spoil the soul (נַפְשׁ) of those that spoiled them."

" 23. 2, "Put a knife to thy throat if thou be a man given to appetite (נַפְשׁ, to soul)."

" 25. 13, "For he refresheth the soul (נַפְשׁ) of his masters."

" 25. 25, "As cold waters to a thirsty soul (נַפְשׁ), so is good news from a far country."

" 27. 7, "The full soul (נַפְשׁ) loatheth an honey-comb; but to the hungry soul (נַפְשׁ) every bitter thing is sweet."

Eccl. 2. 24, "That he should make his soul (שֹׁמֶל) enjoy good in his labor." Marg. "Or, delight his senses."

" 6. 2, "A man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honor, so that he wanteth nothing for his soul (שֹׁמֶל)."

" 6. 3, "And his soul (שֹׁמֶל) be not filled with good."

" 6. 7, "All the labor of man is for his mouth, and yet the appetite (שֹׁמֶל, soul) is not filled."

Is. 29. 8, "As when an hungry man dreameth, and behold he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul (שֹׁמֶל) is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and behold he drinketh; but he awaketh, and behold he is faint, and his soul (שֹׁמֶל) hath appetite."

" 32. 6, "To make empty the soul (שֹׁמֶל) of the hungry."

" 56. 11, "They are greedy dogs (שֹׁמֶל גָּדִים, dogs strong of soul, i. e. of ravenous appetite)."

" 58. 11, "The Lord shall satisfy thy soul (שֹׁמֶל) in drought."

Jer. 31. 12, "Their soul (שֹׁמֶל) shall be as a watered garden."

That the idea here is not primarily that of spiritual abundance, will be obvious upon inspection of the whole verse. So also in the two texts that immediately follow.

Jer. 31. 14, "I will satiate the soul (שֹׁמֶל) of the priests with fatness."

" 31. 25, "I have satiated the weary soul (שֹׁמֶל), and I have replenished every sorrowful soul (שֹׁמֶל)."

" 50. 19, "And I will bring Israel again to his habitation, and he shall feed on Carmel and Bashan, and his soul (שֹׁמֶל) shall be satisfied upon Mount Ephraim and Gilead."

Mic. 7. 1, "My soul (שֹׁמֶל) desired the first ripe fruit."

Mat. 6. 25, "Take no thought for your life (ψυχή), what ye shall eat," &c.—"Is not the life (ψυχή) more than meat, and the body than raiment?"

Luke, 2. 3, "Yea, a sword shall pierce through thine own soul (ψυχήν) also."

We are not entirely confident that this passage ranges itself most naturally under this head. We give it here from its parallelism with Ps. 105. 18, "He was laid in iron (Heb. his soul came into iron)."

Luke, 12. 19, 20, "I will say to my soul (ψυχή), Soul (ψυχή), thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night shall thy soul (ψυχή) be required of thee."

" 12. 22, 23, "Take no thought for your life (ψυχήν), what ye shall eat; neither for your body, what ye shall put on. The life (ψυχή) is more than meat, and the body than raiment."

The foregoing list of quotations might perhaps be increased by the addition of a few more which as properly pertain to this department as most of those actually given; and it might perhaps be diminished by the subtraction of several that would as properly come under another head. But we believe it contains, on the whole, a pretty fair exhibit of the usage which recognizes the word soul, as expressing the seat of what may be termed—whether correctly or not—corporeal sensation and affection, and with which the idea of intellectual attributes is not necessarily connected. Under the next division we are advanced to a higher sense.

§ 5.

נַפְשׁ in the sense of Animus, Rational Soul, Mind, and considered as the Seat of various Passions, Emotions, and Affections pertaining to a Rational Being, such as Love, Joy, Fear, Sorrow, Hope, Hatred, Revenge, Contempt, &c.

Gen. 23. 8, "If it be your mind (אִם־יָדְעַתְּ אֶת־נַפְשִׁי, if it be with your mind or soul) that I should bury my dead."

Gen. 34. 3, "His soul (נַפְשׁוֹ) clave unto Dinah." So also v. 8.

" 42. 21, "We saw the anguish of his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ)."

Ex. 23. 9, Ye know the heart (שֵׁן, the soul, i. e. the feelings) of a stranger."

Lev. 10. 29, "Ye shall afflict your souls (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם)." So also ch. 23. 27. 29. 32, and often elsewhere.

" 26. 15, "If your soul (נַפְשְׁכֶם) abhor my judgments."

" 26. 16, "And cause sorrow of heart (שֵׁן)."

" 26. 43, "Their soul (נַפְשָׁם) abhorred my statutes."

Num. 21. 4, "The soul (נַפְשׁוֹ) of the people was much discouraged."

Deut. 4. 9, "Keep thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ) diligently."

" 4. 29, "Seek him with all thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ)."

" 6. 5, "With all thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ) and all thy might." So also ch. 10. 12, and often elsewhere.

" 11. 18, "In your heart and in your soul (נַפְשְׁכֶם)."

" 18. 16, "With all the desire of his mind (מִן)."

" 28. 65. "The Lord shall give . . . thee sorrow of mind (מִן)."

Judg. 16. 16, "His soul (נַפְשׁוֹ) was vexed unto death."

1 Sam. 1. 10, "She was in bitterness of soul (נַפְשָׁהּ)."

" 2. 33, "To grieve thine heart (שֵׁן)."

" 18. 3, "He loved him as his own soul (נַפְשׁוֹ)."

" 22. 2, "Every one that was discontented (מַר נַפְשׁוֹ, bitter of soul)."

" 30. 6, "The soul (נַפְשָׁם) of all the people was grieved."

2 Sam. 5. 8, "That are hated of David's soul (נַפְשָׁם)."

" 17. 8, "They be chafed in their minds (שֵׁן, bitter of soul)."

2 Kings. 9. 15, "If it be your minds (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם), then let none go."

1 Chron. 28. 9, "Serve him with a perfect heart and a willing mind (מִן)."

Job, 3. 20, "Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul (נַפְשׁ)?"

" 7. 11, "I will complain in the bitterness of my soul (נַפְשִׁי)." So also ch. 10. 1.

" 7. 15, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) chooseth strangling."

" 10. 1, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) is weary of life."

" 14. 22, "And his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ) within him shall mourn."

" 19. 2, "How long will ye vex my soul (נַפְשִׁי)?"

" 30. 25, "Was not my soul (נַפְשִׁי) grieved for the poor?"

Ps. 6. 3, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) is also sore vexed."

" 10. 3, "The wicked boasteth of his soul's (נַפְשׁוֹ) desire."

" 11. 5, "Him that loveth violence his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ) hateth."

" 27. 12, "Deliver me not over unto the will (נַפְשׁוֹ) of mine enemies." See also ch. 41. 2.

" 33. 20, "Our soul (נַפְשֵׁינוּ) waiteth for the Lord."

" 35. 9, "And my soul (נַפְשִׁי) shall be joyful in the Lord."

" 42. 1, "So panteth my soul (נַפְשִׁי) after thee."

" 42. 6, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) is cast down within me." So v. 5; ch. 43. 5; 44. 25; 57. 6.

" 57. 1, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) trusteth in thee."

" 63. 8, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) followeth hard after thee."

" 77. 2, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) refuseth to be comforted."

" 84. 2, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) longeth . . . for the courts of the Lord."

" 86. 4, "Rejoice the soul (נַפְשׁ) of thy servant."

" 88. 3, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) is full of troubles."

" 94. 19, "Thy comforts delight my soul (נַפְשִׁי)."

" 107. 26, "Their soul (נַפְשָׁם) is melted because of trouble."

" 119. 20, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) breaketh for the longing it hath unto thy judgments."

" 119. 25, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) cleaveth unto the dust."

Ps. 119. 28, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) melteth for heaviness."

" 123. 4, "Our soul (נַפְשֵׁנוּ) is exceedingly filled with the scorning of those that are at ease."

" 43. 12, "Destroy all them that afflict my soul (נַפְשִׁי)."

Prov. 2. 10, "Knowledge is pleasant to the soul (נַפְשִׁי)."

" 113. 19, "The desire accomplished is sweet to the soul (נַפְשִׁי)."

" 21. 10, "The soul (נַפְשִׁי) of the wicked desireth evil."

" 28. 25, "He that is of a proud heart (נַפְשִׁי)."

" 29. 17, "He shall give delight unto thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ)."

" 31. 6, "Give wine to those that be of heavy hearts (מְרִיר נַפְשִׁי, bitter of soul)."

Ecc. 6. 3, "And his soul (נַפְשְׁךָ) be not filled with good."

Cant. 3. 1, "O thou, whom my soul (נַפְשִׁי) loveth." So also 2, 3, 4.

Is. 61. 10, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) shall be joyful in God."

Jer. 4. 31, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) is wearied because of murderers."

" 6. 16, "Ye shall find rest for your souls (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם)."

Lam. 1. 16, "The comforter that should relieve my soul (נַפְשִׁי)."

" 3. 51, "Mine eye affecteth my heart (נַפְשִׁי)."

Ezek. 23. 17, "Her mind (נַפְשָׁהּ) was alienated from them."

So also vs. 18, 22, 28.

" 24. 21, "That which your soul (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם) pitieth."

" 25. 6, "Rejoiced in heart (נַפְשִׁי) with all thy despite."

" 25. 15, "Taken vengeance with a despiteful heart (נַפְשִׁי)."

" 36. 5, "Which have appointed my land . . . with despiteful minds (נַפְשִׁי)."

Hos. 4. 8, "They set their heart (נַפְשָׁם) on their iniquity."

Jon. 2. 7, "When my soul (נַפְשִׁי) fainted."

Mich. 7. 3, "He uttereth his mischievous desire (רָצוֹן נַפְשׁוֹ, the mischief of his soul)."

Hab. 2. 4, "Behold his soul (נַפְשְׁךָ) which is lifted up, is not upright in him."

Hab. 1. 5, "Who enlargeth his desire (ἡψυχὴ) as hell."

Mat. 11. 29, "Ye shall find rest for your souls (ψυχαῖς)."

" 22. 37, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul (ψυχή), and with all thy mind." So Luke, 10. 27.

† " 26. 38, "My soul (ψυχή) is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death."

John, 10. 24, "How long dost thou make us to doubt (ἕως πότε τὴν ψυχὴν ἡμῶν αἰεῖς, how long dost thou hold our soul in suspense)?"

" 12. 27, "Now is my soul (ψυχή) troubled."

Acts, 14. 2, "But the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds (ψυχάς, souls) evil affected against the brethren."

" 14. 22, "Confirming the souls (ψυχάς) of the disciples."

" 15. 24, "Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us, have troubled you with words, subverting your souls (ψυχάς)."

2 Cor. 1. 23, "Moreover, I call God for a record upon my soul (ψυχὴν)."

Eph. 6. 6, "As the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart (ψυχῆς, soul)."

Phil. 1. 27, "That ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind (ψυχή) striving together for the faith of the gospel."

Col. 3. 23, "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily (ἐκ τῆς ψυχῆς, from the soul), as to the Lord."

1 Thes. 5. 23, "I pray God your whole spirit, soul (ψυχή), and body, be preserved blameless."

Heb. 4. 12, "Piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul (ψυχῆς) and spirit."

" 6. 19, "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul (ψυχῆς)."

" 10. 39, "Of them that believe to the saving of the soul (ψυχῆς)." So also 1 Pet. 1. 9.

Heb. 12. 3, "Lest ye be weary and faint in your minds (ψυχὰς)."

" 13. 17, "For they watch for your souls (ψυχῶν) as they that must give account."

1 Pet. 1. 22, "Seeing ye have purified your souls (ψυχὰς) in obeying the truth."

" 2. 11, "Abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul (ψυχῆς)."

" 2. 25, "But are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls (ψυχῶν)."

" 4. 19, "Let them commit the keeping of their souls (ψυχῶν) to him in well doing."

2 Pet. 2. 8, "Vexed his righteous soul (ψυχὴν) from day to day."

§ 6.

שֵׁנַי in the sense of Person.

The passages are very numerous in which the word שֵׁנַי is employed as a concrete for the man as mainly distinguished by the possession of a soul, which is to be regarded as the true constituent of his personality, whatever may be its essential nature, of which no intimation is given in the term itself. A perfectly equivalent usage obtains in our language, as nothing is more common than to speak of a multitude of persons as a multitude of souls. Thus Shakespeare, speaking of a vessel that was shipwrecked, says she went down, and "all the freighting souls within her." Thus too we speak of the population of a city or country as amounting to so many souls.

Gen. 12. 5, "And all the souls (col. sing. שֵׁנַי soul) that they had gotten in Haran," i. e. persons.

" 14. 21, "Give me the persons (שֵׁנַי) and take the goods to thyself."

" 17. 44, "That soul (שֵׁנַי) shall be cut off from his people."

en. 36. 6, "And Esau took . . . all the persons (נַפְשׁוֹתָם; Gr. σώματα, bodies) of his house."

It doubtless appears singular that the term which in the Hebrew stands for soul should have been rendered in Greek the usual word for bodies. But as soul and body are the two grand constituents of man, so he may be, as he is, sometimes denominated from the one, and sometimes from the other.

en. 46. 18, "These she bare . . . sixteen souls (נַפְשֵׁי)." .

So also vs. 22, 25, 26, 27.

g. 1. 5, "All the souls (נַפְשֵׁי) that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy souls (נַפְשֵׁי)."

12. 14, "According to the number of the souls (נַפְשֵׁי)."

12. 15, "That soul (נַפְשׁ) shall be cut off from Israel."

So v. 19, ch. 31. 14, and often elsewhere.

16. 16, ("According to) the number of your persons (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם)."

iv. 2. 1, "And when any (נַפְשׁ, a soul) will offer a male offering."

4. 2, "If a soul (נַפְשׁ) shall sin through ignorance."

4. 17, "If any one (נַפְשׁ marg. any soul) of the common people sin."

5. 2, "If a soul (נַפְשׁ) touch any unclean thing." So v. 4, "If a soul (נַפְשׁ) swear." v. 15, "If a soul (נַפְשׁ) commit a trespass." So in a multitude of other instances.

17. 12, "No soul (נַפְשׁ) of you shall eat blood."

17. 15, "Every soul (נַפְשׁ) that eateth that which died."

20. 6, "I will even set my face against that soul (נַפְשׁ)."

21. 11, "If the priest buy any soul (נַפְשׁ)."

23. 30, "Whatsoever soul (נַפְשׁ) it be that doeth any work in that same day, the same soul (נַפְשׁ) will I destroy."

29. 2, "The persons (נַפְשֵׁי) shall be for the Lord."

Num. 5. 6, "And that person (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ) be guilty."

" 15. 30, "But the soul (רוֹשׁוֹנָה) that doeth aught presumptuously."

" 19. 18, "Shall sprinkle it upon the persons (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ) that were there."

" 31. 19, "Whosoever hath killed any person (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ)."

" 31. 28, "One soul (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ) of five hundred."

" 31. 35, "And thirty and two thousand persons (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ) in all." So also vs. 40, 46.

Deut. 10. 22, "Threescore and ten persons (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ)."

" 24. 7, "If a man be found stealing any (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ, a soul) of his brethren."

" 27. 25, "Cursed be he that taketh reward to slay an innocent person (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ)."

Josh. 11. 11, "They smote all the souls (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ)." So in numerous other instances.

1 Sam. 22. 22, "I have occasioned the death of all the persons (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ) of thy father's house."

2 Sam. 14. 14, "Neither doth God respect any person (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ)."

Prov. 14. 25, "A true witness delivereth souls (רוֹשׁוֹנָה, i. e. persons)."

" 19. 15, "An idle soul (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ, i. e. person) shall suffer hunger)."

Jer. 43. 6, "Every person (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ) that Nebuzar-adan . . . had left."

" 52. 29, "Eight hundred thirty and two persons (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ)."
So v. 30.

Ezek. 16. 5, "To the loathing of thy person (הַשֶּׁנֶּפֶשׁ)."

" 17. 17, "To cut off many persons (רוֹשׁוֹנָה)."

" 22. 27, "To shed blood and to destroy souls (רוֹשׁוֹנָה, i. e. persons)."

" 27. 13, "They traded the persons (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ) of men." Comp. Rev. 18, 13.

" 33. 6, "If the sword come and take any person (שֶׁנֶּפֶשׁ) from among them."

Acts, 2. 41, "And the same day were added unto them " about three thousand souls (ψυχάς)." So also ch. 7.
14—27, 37.

" 2. 43, "And fear came upon every soul (ψυχή)."

" 3. 23, "And it shall come to pass that every soul (ψυχή) which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed."

Rom. 2. 9, "Tribulation and anguish upon every soul (ψυχὴν) of man that doeth evil."

1 Cor. 15. 45, "The first Adam was made a living soul (εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν), the last Adam was made a quickening spirit (εἰς πνεῦμα ζωοποιοῦν)."

The peculiarity in this passage is so striking as to deserve especial remark. The allusion is direct and verbal to Gen. 2. 7, as rendered in the Greek of the Septuagint, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul (εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν)." The question arises as to the precise point of the contrast between the two Adams. The solution would be less difficult if we could fully satisfy ourselves on another question, viz., whether the designations were strictly intended to be personal or collective—whether by the "first Adam," was meant exclusively the individual progenitor of our race, and by the "last Adam," Christ; or whether "Adam" in both cases is a generic term for man, the first denoting man as fallen, sinful, earthly; the second, man as regenerated, spiritual, heavenly. This latter view we think may be admitted, while we admit at the same time that man, in this twofold character, is represented by the two persons thus denominated. It is certain that the name "Adam" is applied as a title of the collective humanity of the race in its fallen state, as when it is said, Gen. 6. 5, that "God saw the wickedness of man (אָדָם the Adam), that it was great." (Comp. Gen. 1. 26, 27; 5. 1; 6. 1.) It is in this sense analogous to the "old man" which is to be put off in order that the "new man," which Christ represents, may be put on. If this be not the import here, it is extremely difficult to discover the justness of the ground on which the apostle asserts of Adam individually that he was made εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν, a living soul, viewing the term ψυχὴ as the opposite to πνεῦμα, spirit; for if Adam was created holy, as is universally conceded, it would seem that he must have been πνευματικός, spiritual, as well as ψυχικός, psychical or natural. Yet the quotation literally taken refers to Adam at his first creation, and before his fall. He was then, it is true, created a ψυχὴ ζῶσα, a living soul, but this could not of itself set him in opposition to Christ considered as πνευματικός, spiritual, because he also by being holy must have been spiritual, nor does any one of the saints by becoming spiritual cease thereby to be psychical in the sense of which ψυχὴ is affirmed of Adam at his creation. How then can a contrast be made out between the psychical body of unfallen Adam and the spiritual body of the resurrection, which is held to be derived from the quickening virtue of Christ the Lord?

The use of a term denoting simply natural or animal life does not of itself contradistinguish the body here inhabited by regenerate man from the spiritual or resurrection body, because the animal or psychical principle does not become extinct in consequence of a man's being rendered spiritual by virtue of his union to Christ. How then, we ask again, is the contrast established between sinless Adam as a ψυχὴ and Christ as a πνεῦμα? We are for ourselves unable to answer the question but upon the view above suggested, that Adam is here to be understood generically, and that the phrase ψυχὴ ζῶσα is to be taken as a predicate of fallen humanity, in which the psychical principle, viewed as the seat of sensation, temptation, concupiscence, and the various forms of sinful and corrupt affection, has obtained the ascendancy. The "first man Adam," therefore, we take to be a designation of the first collective man in his lapsed and sinful state prior to his becoming morally renewed, and thus capable of having his psychical body spiritualized by coming under the transforming influence of the Spirit of Christ. He is in that state psychical in a bad sense just as he is fleshly in a bad sense. But as a Christian does not by being regenerated cease to be possessed of flesh as a constituent element of his nature, so neither does he cease, from the same cause, to be possessed of a $\psi\psi\eta$ by means of which he passes into the other world in a psychical body.

It is a fact, indeed, that the apostle quotes an expression which is applied in the original reference to the personal Adam at his creation, but the whole drift of his discourse makes it evident that it is to be understood as a predicate of his fallen descendants in their natural or unrenewed state, in which the psychical or sensual nature has obtained such a paramount sway as properly to denominate the whole man. This construction brings the entire context into harmony. "It is sown a natural body ($\sigma\omega\mu\alpha\ \psi\psi\chi\iota\kappa\acute{o}\nu$), it is raised a spiritual body ($\sigma\omega\mu\alpha\ \pi\acute{\nu}\epsilon\upsilon\mu\alpha\tau\iota\kappa\acute{o}\nu$)." That is, it is sown a natural or psychical body, not at its burial after death, but in its origin as derived from a mainly psychical source, for "that which is born of the flesh, is flesh," as "that which is born of the Spirit, is spirit." Man is sown a natural body by his birth from a natural, i. e. a sinful, parentage. He then adds, "There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body," and this he goes on to illustrate, rather than prove, by the above quotation from Genesis, in which he applies the language originally spoken of Adam as an individual before his fall to the collective race of Adam after the fall, in order to indicate the character of the change which it would be requisite for them to undergo that they might become partakers of a resurrection which should put them in possession of spiritual bodies, i. e. bodies brought under the controlling influence of the divine Spirit, as the former were under the prevailing dominion of the sensual psyche. "And so it is written, The first man Adam (i. e. man collectively in his first or fallen state, known in Scripture by the generic title 'Adam') was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. Howbeit, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual." That is, the fallen or dominantly psychical humanity was prior in order to the spiritual or regenerate. "The first man (the first collective fallen man, who may be conceived as embodied and represented in the person of Adam) is of the earth, earthy; the second man (in like manner embodied and represented in Christ) is the Lord from heaven." Here it is remarkable that the word "Lord" (κύριος) is wanting in some early copies of high repute, which has induced Lachman to leave it out of the text of his edition of the New Testament, and it is wanting also in the Latin Vulgate, which renders, "Secundus homo de cœlo, cœlestis," the second man from heaven (is) heavenly; or the second man (is) from heaven, heavenly. Now though we cannot doubt that Christ is here really alluded to, as Adam is in the previous clause, yet we conceive the true idea is that of a collective body of whom Christ is to be regarded as the representative type, and we cannot but deem the internal evidence of the passage against the reading which inserts "Lord." The conformity of the two collective bodies to their representing heads is clearly developed in the ensuing verse; "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly."

It will be observed that the scope of the apostle is all along to illustrate the doctrine of the resurrection, and to show how the resurrection-body is distinguished from the natural body. With this view he presents Adam and Christ, the respective representatives of each, in strong contrast with each other. But it is fallen, or predominantly psychical Adam, that is set before us, and while he is called a living soul, Christ is called a quickeningspirit. The term quickeningspirit in this connexion is usually understood as equivalent to life-giving or life-imparting; and as the resurrection is the particular theme of discourse, it is supposed that the term points to that divine power by which Christ raises the bodies of his people from the dead and endows them with resurrection-life. But if the resurrection set forth in this chapter be the resurrection of the bodies of the ~~saints~~, it would seem that this would depend rather upon the exertion of what we may term physical than of spiritual omnipotence, for it is not easy to perceive how the divine spiritual agency should act upon any thing but the spiritual nature of man. As then the epithet $\zeta\omega\sigma\pi\omicron\iota\omicron\upsilon\nu$, *quicken*ing, has no object expressed upon which the action can be supposed to fall, we take it as intended to denote the vivifying power which is put forth not upon the dead bodies, but upon the dead spirits, of men, raising them up by regeneration to a new spiritual life, which receives its consummation in the resurrection upon which they enter at death. It is scarcely possible, we think, to overlook the fact, that not only here, but throughout the New Testament, the resurrection of the saints is spoken of but as the completed issue of their regeneration. It is not represented as a great event suspended upon the exertion of the same kind of power with that which called the universe into being, but rather as the normal and necessary result of that divine operative energy by which they are first awakened from the death of trespasses and sins and made new creatures in Christ Jesus. Thus Paul, in so earnestly desiring and pressing on to attain the resurrection of the dead, is but breathing after the completed result of his regeneration, which he expresses by "apprehending that for which he also is apprehended of Christ."

Adopting this interpretation we may still retain the collective sense which we have affirmed of the two Adams. As the "first man," viewed as corrupt and fallen, was made a living soul, or one in which the psychical nature predominated, so the "second man," of which Christ is the head, was made a *quicken*ing, i. e. a *self-quicken*ing spirit. The power which wrought in him and so gloriously demonstrated itself in his resurrection from the dead, works also in them.

to the same result, and though flowing from him as its source, yet it eventuates in presenting the whole sanctified and transmuted body, both head and members, as a self-quickened spirit, where spirit doubtless has the sense of a spiritual person, just as living soul denotes a person. And that this term, in reference to Christ himself, has truly such an import and points to his resurrection-person, is evinced, we think, by the following passages. Rom. 1. 3, 4, "Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh (κατὰ σάρκα), and declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness (κατὰ πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης) by the resurrection from the dead." Here it is evident that the phrases "according to the flesh" and "according to the spirit of holiness" (i.e. holy spirit, by which, however, is not meant the third person of the Trinity), are set in designed contrast with each other, the one denoting his fleshly human nature prior to the resurrection, the other his exalted spiritual nature subsequent to that event. The term πνεῦμα plainly imports that condition or state into which he came by his resurrection from the dead, and which could never have been affirmed of the simple resuscitation of his entombed fleshly body. It is in fact the designation of his raised, spiritual, and glorified body, and in the same sense is it to be understood in the passage under consideration, where the same exalted personage is called a quickening spirit. Thus, too, 1 Tim. 3. 16, "God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit (ἐδικαιώθη ἐν πνεύματι), seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." This is a compendious summary of the entire process through which the divine Redeemer passed from his birth to his ascension to heaven. The clause, "justified in the spirit," where the original (ἐν πνεύματι) lacks the article, showing that it cannot mean that he was justified by the Holy Spirit, refers to his resurrection. He was justified, i. e. publicly acknowledged and accredited, as the true

Messiah, by being translated at his resurrection into a spiritual state and form, as gloriously distinguished from his previous fleshly mode of manifestation. So also 1 Pet. 3. 18, "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh ($\sigma\alpha\rho\kappa\iota$), but quickened by the spirit ($\pi\nu\epsilon\acute{\iota}\mu\alpha\tau\iota$)."
Here again we recognize a contrast in the ante- and the post-resurrection state of Christ, the one denoted by $\sigma\alpha\rho\kappa\iota$, flesh, and the other by $\pi\nu\epsilon\acute{\iota}\mu\alpha$, spirit. In both, as in the previous instances, allusion is had to his twofold body, the one of his humiliation, the other of his glorification. The one is fleshly, the other is spiritual. If his material body had been raised unchanged, he would have been quickened in the flesh, which he certainly was not. He was quickened in a spiritual body as truly as he was put to death in a material body, and this is indicated by the original terms $\sigma\alpha\rho\kappa\iota$ and $\pi\nu\epsilon\acute{\iota}\mu\alpha\tau\iota$, which are grammatically parallel with each other.

From all that has now been adduced we find the light of a strong illustration thrown upon the words of the apostle in the passage under review. "The last Adam was made a quickening spirit." The language points directly to Christ in his resurrection-state as the exemplar of the saints when they also shall have assumed their resurrection-bodies. It is in this that the true antithesis lies between the two mystic Adams, the state of the one being predominantly psychical, in the sense of fallen, sinful, sensual; the other possessed of a nature spiritual, i. e. sanctified, celestial, glorious. And such as the state is, such also is the body appropriated to each. For ourselves we can scarcely conceive of any evidence more decisive that our Lord arose in a spiritual instead of a fleshly body, and that his resurrection-state during the forty days previous to the ascension was an express prototype of the spiritual bodies which the saints, like their great pattern, assume, when they like him pass from these bodies of clay into their immortal corporeity.

In some few of the above citations it may be doubtful whether the idea of lives is not more legitimately the sense of souls, but as to the mass of them there can be no question but that they are rightly represented by the word persons.

We now come to a class, very closely related to the preceding, where the word stands for that which constitutes the conscious inner and essential self of man, without however affording any cl w to the intrinsic nature or properties of the substance to which it refers. It is a usage grounded upon the universally innate impression that a man's soul is, par eminence, himself.

§ 7.

נַפְשׁ in the sense of One's Self, or the interior and ground-element of his being, the Personal Hypostasis.

Gen. 12. 13, "My soul (נַפְשׁ) shall live because of thee." That is, I, myself, shall live.

" 19. 20, "Let me escape thither, and my soul (נַפְשׁ) shall live." That is, I shall live.

" 27. 4, "That my soul (נַפְשׁ) may bless thee." That is, that I may bless thee. So also vs. 19, 25, 31.

" 49. 6, "O my soul (נַפְשׁ), come not thou into their secret." That is, O myself, come not.

Ex. 30. 15, "To make an atonement for your souls (נַפְשׁוֹתֵיכֶם)." That is, for yourselves. And so in innumerable other cases.

Lev. 11. 43, "Ye shall not make yourselves (נַפְשׁוֹתֵיכֶם, marg. your souls) abominable."

" 11. 44, "Neither shall ye defile yourselves (נַפְשׁוֹתֵיכֶם, your souls)."

Num. 16. 38, "The censers of these sinners against their own souls (נַפְשָׁם, i. e. against themselves)."

" 23. 10, "Let me (נַפְשִׁי, my soul) die the death of the righteous."

- Num. 30. 2, "To bind his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ, i. e. himself) with a bond." So also vs. 4—11.
- Deut. 4. 15, "Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם, your souls)."
- Judg. 5. 21, "O my soul (נַפְשִׁי), thou hast trodden down strength."
- " 16. 30, "Let me (נַפְשִׁי, my soul) die with the Philistines."
- 1 Sam. 1. 15, "But have poured out my soul (נַפְשִׁי) before the Lord," i. e. have unbosomed myself, have laid open my inmost thoughts and feelings.
- " 25. 26, "As thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ) liveth," i. e. as thou thyself livest.
- 1 Kings, 1. 29, "That hath redeemed my soul (נַפְשִׁי)," i. e. hath redeemed me, myself.
- Est. 4. 13, "Think not with thyself (נַפְשְׁךָ, thy soul) that thou shalt escape."
- " 9. 31, "As they had decreed for themselves (נַפְשֵׁם, their souls)."
- Job, 7. 15, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) chooseth strangling," i. e. I choose.
- " 9. 21, "Yet would I not know my soul (נַפְשִׁי)," i. e. would not approve myself.
- " 16. 4, "If your soul (נַפְשְׁכֶם) were in my soul's (נַפְשִׁי) stead," i. e. if you were in my stead.
- " 31. 30, "Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin by wishing a curse to his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ)," i. e. to him.
- " 32. 2, "Against Job was his wrath kindled because he justified himself (נַפְשׁוֹ his soul)."
- " 33. 18, "He keepeth back his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ) from the pit," i. e. him. So also v. 30.
- " 33. 22, "His soul (נַפְשׁוֹ) draweth near unto the grave," i. e. he draws near; or we may understand it of his life.
- Ps. 3. 2, "Many there be which say of my soul (נַפְשִׁי)," i. e. of me.

- Ps. 7. 2, "Lest he tear my soul (נַפְשִׁי) like a lion," i. e. tear me.
- " 7. 5, "Let the enemy persecute my soul (נַפְשִׁי)," i. e. me.
- " 11. 1, "How say ye to my soul (נַפְשִׁי)," i. e. to me.
- " 13. 2, "Shall I take counsel in my soul (נַפְשִׁי)," i. e. with myself.
- " 16. 10, "Thou wilt not leave my soul (נַפְשִׁי) in hell," i. e. wilt not leave me. So also as quoted Acts 2. 27, 31.
- " 17. 13, "Deliver my soul (נַפְשִׁי) from the wicked," i. e. deliver me. So 22. 10.
- " 22. 29, "None can keep alive his own soul (נַפְשׁוֹ)," i. e. himself.
- " 25. 13, "His soul (נַפְשׁוֹ) shall dwell at ease," i. e. he shall dwell.
- " 26. 9, "Gather not my soul (נַפְשִׁי) with sinners," i. e. me.
- " 31. 7, "Thou hast known my soul (נַפְשִׁי) in adversities," i. e. me.
- " 35. 17, "Rescue my soul (נַפְשִׁי) from their destructions," i. e. me.
- " 42. 5, 11, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul, (נַפְשִׁי)," i. e. O myself.
- " 49. 18, "Though he blessed his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ)," i. e. himself.
- " 66. 16, "I will declare what he hath done for my soul (נַפְשִׁי)," i. e. for me.
- " 105. 18, "He (נַפְשׁוֹ, his soul) was laid in iron.
- " 109. 20, "Them that speak evil against my soul (נַפְשִׁי)," i. e. against me.
- " 119. 67, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) hath kept thy testimonies," i. e. I have kept.
- " 131. 2, "I have behaved and quieted myself (נַפְשִׁי, my soul)."

Ps. 139. 14, "And that my soul (נַפְשִׁי) knoweth right well,"
i. e. I know.

Prov. 16. 26, "He (נַפְשׁוֹ, the soul) that laboreth, laboreth for himself."

Is. 5. 14, "Therefore hell hath enlarged herself (נַפְשָׁהּ her soul)."
Figuratively spoken.

" 44. 20, "A deceived heart hath turned him aside, that he cannot deliver his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ)," i. e. himself.

" 46. 2, "They could not deliver the burden, but themselves (נַפְשֵׁיהֶם, their souls) are gone into captivity."

" 47. 14, "They shall not deliver themselves (נַפְשֵׁיהֶם, their souls)."

" 51. 23, "Which have said to thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ), bow down;" i. e. which have said to thee.

Jer. 3. 11, "The backsliding Israel hath justified herself (נַפְשָׁהּ, her soul)."

" 17. 21, "Take heed to yourselves (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם), to your souls."

" 37. 9, "Deceive not yourselves (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם, your souls)."

" 40. 15, "Wherefore should he slay thee (נַפְשְׁךָ, thy soul)?"

Ezek. 4. 14, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) hath not been polluted."

" 33. 5, "He that taketh warning shall deliver his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ)," i. e. himself.

Am. 2. 14, "Neither shall the mighty deliver himself (נַפְשׁוֹ, his soul)."
So v. 15.

Jon. 4. 8, "He wished in himself (נַפְשׁוֹ, his soul) to die."

Luke, 1. 46, "My soul (ψυχή) doth magnify the Lord,"
i. e. I do magnify.

" 21. 19, "In patience possess ye your souls (ψυχας)," i. e. possess yourselves.

Rom. 13. 1, "Let every soul (ψυχή) be subject to the higher powers."

2 Cor. 12. 15, "I will very gladly spend and be spent for you (ὕπερ τῶν ψυχῶν ὑμῶν, for your souls)."

1 Thes. 2. 8, "We were willing to have imparted unto you, not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls (ψυχὰς)," i. e. ourselves.

James, 1. 21, "Receive with meekness the ingrafted word, which is able to save your souls (ψυχὰς)."

" 5. 20, "He which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul (ψυχὴν) from death."

2 Pet. 2, 14, "Beguiling unstable souls (ψυχὰς)."

Rev. 16. 3, "And every living soul (ψυχῇ) died in the sea."

There undoubtedly remains uncited a numerous list of passages under this head, which is perhaps more extensive than any other. But all the prominent passages are given, and their purport is very obvious. They recognize the fact, that man is man from his soul, or as Cicero says, Mens cujusque is quisque, every man's mind is himself. It is that part of his nature which gives denomination to the whole. At the same time this usage affords no clew to the essential and ontological properties of this element of his being. We are left to determine this, if possible, from our own researches in the field of physiology and psychology. The Scriptures speak on the subject from the communis sensus of the whole human race. Every one knows that he has an inner principle of life, thought, sensation, and action, apart from his bodily structure, and all languages proceed on the principle of predicating of this interior element those attributes which distinguish the man as a compound entity consisting of soul and body. The Scriptures evidently profess nothing more.

In the list of texts above displayed the reader will be struck with several in which the soul is said to die as well as to live. Thus, Judges, 16. 30, "Let me die (אֶחְיֶה אִתָּךְ, let my soul die) with the Philistines." Num. 23. 10, "Let me die (אֶחְיֶה אִתָּךְ) the death of the righteous." Job. 36. 14, "They die (אֶחְיֶה אִתָּךְ their soul dieth) in youth, and their life is among the unclean." Probably nothing more is intimated by this than the cessation of life, yet the phraseology is remarkable when viewed in connexion with our ordinary ideas of the meaning of the word soul as indicating that principle of our being which is regarded in its own nature as immortal.

We give in this connexion the several passages in which the term is applied to God.

Lev. 26, 11, "And I will set my tabernacle amongst you ; and my soul (נַפְשִׁי) shall not abhor you." So v. 30.

Judg. 10. 16, "And they put away the strange gods from among them, and served the Lord : and his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ) was grieved for the misery of Israel."

Is. 1. 14, "Your appointed feasts my soul (נַפְשִׁי) hateth."

Jer. 5. 9, 29, "Shall not my soul (נַפְשִׁי) be avenged on such a nation as this ?" So also ch. 9. 9.

" 6. 8, "Be then instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul (נַפְשִׁי) depart from thee."

" 12. 7, "I have given the dearly beloved of my soul (נַפְשִׁי) into the hand of her enemies."

" 14. 19, "Hast thou utterly rejected Judah ? hath thy soul (נַפְשְׁךָ) loathed Zion ?"

" 15. 1, "Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind (נַפְשִׁי, my soul) could not be toward this people."

" 32. 41, "I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart and with my whole soul (נַפְשִׁי)."

" 51. 14, "The Lord of hosts hath sworn by himself (נַפְשׁוֹ, his soul)."

Ezek. 23. 18, "Then my mind (נַפְשִׁי, my soul) was alienated from her."

Am. 6. 8, "The Lord God hath sworn by himself (נַפְשׁוֹ, his soul)."

Zech. 11. 8, "And my soul (נַפְשִׁי) loathed them, and their soul also abhorred me."

In the following texts we find the term applied to Christ.

Ps. 16. 10, "Thou wilt not leave my soul (נַפְשִׁי) in hell, nor suffer thine holy one to see corruption."

Is. 53. 10, "When thou shalt make his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ) an offering for sin."

" 53. 11, "He shall see of the travail of his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ), and be satisfied."

" 53. 12, "Because he hath poured out his soul (נַפְשׁוֹ) unto death."

§ 8.

נַפְשׁוֹ in the sense of Dead Body.

We come now to a very remarkable usage by which נַפְשׁוֹ, as well as its Greek representative ψυχή, is applied to a dead body. It is probable that in the cases coming under this head the phrase is elliptical, the full formula being נַפְשׁוֹ נַפְשׁוֹ, soul or life of a dead person, or corpse, which, as will be seen, occurs in two or three instances. It is true that even in this sense the expression is somewhat singular, but it finds an analogy in that form of speech by which the widow of a deceased person is still called his wife. Thus, Gen. 38. 8, "And Judah said unto Onan, Go in unto thy brother's wife (widow), and marry her, and raise up seed to thy brother." Deut. 25. 5, "The wife of the dead shall not marry a stranger." V. 7, "And if the man like not to take his brother's wife, then let his brother's wife go to the gate unto the elders, and say," &c. In like manner, the soul had been the consort of the body, as the wife of the husband; and though it is true that the visible relic in this case is the body instead of the soul, yet it is doing no special violence to language to apply to that relic the term by which its higher and nobler part had been in life distinguished. If this be not the true solution of a singular philological problem, we leave it to the decision of some more sagacious investigator. Gesenius and Winer, however, maintain that there is an ellipsis of נַפְשׁוֹ, corpse.

Lev. 19. 28, "Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead (נַפְשׁוֹ)."

- ev. 21. 1, "There shall none be defiled for the dead (נֶפֶשׁ) among his people."
- ' 21. 11, "Neither shall he go in to any dead body (נֶפֶשׁ מֵתָא lit. souls of the dead)."
- ' 22. 4, "Whoso toucheth any thing that is unclean by the dead (נֶפֶשׁ)."
- um. 5. 2, "Every one that hath an issue, and whosoever is defiled by the dead (נֶפֶשׁ)."
- ' 6. 6, "All the days that he separateth himself unto the Lord he shall come at no dead body (נֶפֶשׁ מֵתָא, soul of the dead)."
- ' 6. 11, "For that he sinned by the dead (נֶפֶשׁ)."
- ' 9. 6, 7, "And there were certain men who were defiled by the dead body (נֶפֶשׁ) of a man."
- ' 9. 10, "If any man of you shall be unclean by a dead body (נֶפֶשׁ)."
- ' • 19. 13, "Whosoever [toucheth the dead body (נֶפֶשׁ) of any man."
- ag. 2. 13, "If one that is unclean by a dead body (נֶפֶשׁ) touch any of these, shall it be unclean?"

We have thus arrayed before the eye of the reader the various scriptural usage which obtains in regard to the word נֶפֶשׁ=ψυχή=soul. We have seen that in its first and west sense, as conveyed by its etymology, it denotes the death, and thence by natural transition the life, the presence of which is most obviously indicated by the act of respiration. But as life in the animal world is not found apart from sensation, therefore, as might be expected, the term which is used to denote the principle of life naturally extends itself to designate the principle which is the immediate object and subject of sensation. Up to this point, however, we recognize nothing in the import of the term which does not apply to the brute creation as well as to man, for brutes live and feel, as truly as do men; and so far as the word soul expresses simply life and sensation, so far the beasts are possessed of souls as well as men. But the word is used in a yet higher sense. Where we find sensation we find senses and sensual appetites and desires—certain inbred promptings which refer themselves more especially to the body, because, in the present life, we can only recognize these senses as a part of the bodily economy. Still as the body is entirely devoid of these sensations when forsaken of the soul, we naturally infer that the sentient power is strictly an attribute of the soul and not of the body; nor can we well resist the inference that this power goes forth with the soul into the new sphere to which it is transferred at death, although there necessarily acted upon and exercised by different objects from those with which it was conversant in the life of the body. In the definite conception of this change we are aided by the analogies drawn from the insect world. The sentient power of the caterpillar doubtless passes with its life into the butterfly form, but it is there acted upon by entirely different objects from those which excited its sensitivity in its primitive structure. It is now a denizen of the atmosphere, refreshed by its aromas, and looking upon scenes new and strange to its tiny eyes, but still with its sensitive nature not only perfectly retained, but vastly improved. So with man subsequent to his translation into the spiritual world.

Advancing still farther in the gradation of sense, we find the term extending its import to embrace the idea of a higher class of affections such as pertain mostly to a rational being, and imply the exercise of those various passions and emotions which have their seat in a higher region of intellect. The examples however of this usage, given under the fourth head, evince that we are still within the range of that import of the word which applies to beasts as well as to man. Nothing is more obvious than that the brute creation is possessed of emotions and passions as truly as man. While the degree of intelligence they manifest is often astonishing, they give proof also of being affected by love, joy, fear, sor- ow, hatred, jealousy, and shame. So far therefore as these affections in man can be predicated of the ψυχή, or soul, as their subject, so far must they be referred to the same subject in the nature of beasts. Still man is distinguished by a heaven-wide difference from the highest grade of the brute tribes, yet not upon the ground of the ψυχή. The basis of the distinction is laid in man's possession of the πνεῦμα, or spirit, which, as we shall see, is never truly predicated of the beasts of the field.

But waiving this for the present, we remark, that the next and most important sense of the term is that of person. It is perfectly obvious, from the multitudinous instances adduced, that the soul is but a denomination for the man, and the inference is not only legitimate, but inevitable, that man exists in the most absolute integrity of his nature, apart from the material body which he here inhabits, for nothing is clearer than that the term ψυχή is applied to man after his dislodgment from the house of clay. Thus, Rev. 6. 9, "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls (ψυχάς) of them that were slain," &c. Ch. 20. 4, "And I saw the souls (ψυχάς) of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus." So Wisd. 3. 1, "The souls (ψυχὰς) of the just are in the hands of God." But upon this idea we shall dwell more at length in a subsequent page. We now purpose to investigate the usage in relation to the original words for spirit.

CHAPTER III.

Import of Original Scriptural Terms for Spirit.

§ 1.

רוּחַ (ruahh), πνεῦμα (pneuma), Spirit.

THIS is one of those terms in Hebrew which it is impossible, on satisfactory grounds, to refer to any verbal root more primitive than itself. The Lexicons exhibit, indeed, the cognate word רָוַח rāvahh, to breathe, or rather to breathe freely, by which the breast is enlarged, dilated, and refreshed, and thence giving the natural secondary sense of large, ample, spacious, as may be seen by consulting 1 Sam. 16. 23, “So Saul was refreshed (וַיִּרְוַח שָׁאִיל—Lit. and refreshing was to Saul.)” Job, 32. 20, “I will speak that I may be refreshed (וַיִּרְוַח לִי—Lit. and refreshment shall be to me.)” Jer. 22. 14, “I will build me a wide house and large (מְרוּחָהִים spacious, airy) chambers.” So with the derivatives רוּחַ revahh and רוּחָהּ revāhhāh; Est. 4. 14, “If thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement (רוּחַ revahh) and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place.” Gen. 32. 14, “And put a space (רוּחַ revahh) between drove and drove,” i. e. a free space, an ample interval, the opposite of strait, or constrained. Ex. 8. 15, “But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite (רְחֻחַהּ a breathing-spell), he hardened his heart.” Lam. 3. 56, “Hide not thine ear at my breathing (רוּחָתִי).” We have also the supposititious verbal רוּחַ ruahh in the sense of breathing or blowing, but it nowhere occurs in the Kal or simplest form, but only in Hiphil or the causative form (הִרְיַח hēriahh), and there with the import of smelling, the relation of which to the breathing process is quite obvious. But even this verb is undoubtedly a denominative from the noun רוּחַ riahh, scent, smell, just as הִנָּפֵשׁ is from נָפֵשׁ. Yet that there is a mutual relation between the forms רוּחַ, רְחֻחַהּ, and רוּחַ, is unquestionable from the fact that the radical idea of breath, air in motion, air inhaled and exhaled, is fundamental to each of them; but we know of no competent authority for making the verb רוּחַ the primitive root, any more than רוּחַ or רוּחַ. The idea of air in the form of breath or wind is doubtless of as early origin as that of the act by which it is put in motion, and which would be expressed by a verb. Assuming then the principle, which is generally adopted by lexicographers, that the physical idea of most words is primitive, we may assign breath as the first sense of רוּחַ, and wind as the second. From these the subordinate tropical applications of the term will be seen to flow by a very natural train of sequence.

The corresponding Greek term πνεῦμα comes from πνέω, to blow, and thus affords another instance of the etymological relation of this class of words to roots having reference to air or wind. Like the Heb. original this term also occurs in the lower or physical sense of wind and breath, as Gen. 8. 1, "And God made a wind (πνεῦμα) to pass over the earth." Eccl. 1. 6, "The wind (πνεῦμα) goeth toward the south, and turneth about unto the north." Is. 7. 2, "And his heart was moved and the heart of his people, as the trees of the wood are moved by the wind (ὑπὸ πνεύματος)." Ps. 35. 17, "They have ears but they hear not; neither is there here any breath (πνεῦμα) in their mouths." John, 3. 8, "The wind (πνεῦμα) bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof," &c. In ordinary usage, however, it denotes, like its Heb. equivalent, the spirit of God or man in one or other of the various senses disclosed under the ensuing list of citations, the result of which it will not be necessary here to anticipate.

§ 2.

(1.) רוּחַ in the sense of Breath.

1. Spoken of man.

Gen. 6. 17, "All flesh wherein is the breath of life (רוּחַ חַיִּים)." So also ch. 7. 15.

"7. 22, "All in whose nostrils was the breath of life (רוּחַ חַיִּים—Marg. the breath of the spirit of life)."

Job, 9. 18, "He will not suffer me to take my breath (רוּחִי)."

"12. 10, "In whose hand is the soul of every living thing, and the breath (רוּחַ) of all mankind."

"15. 30, "By the breath (רוּחַ) of his mouth shall he go away."

Job, 17. 1, "My breath (רוּחִי) is corrupt, my days are extinct, the graves are ready for me."

" 19. 17, "My breath (רוּחִי) is strange to my wife."

" 27. 3, "All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God (רוּחַ אֱלֹהִים) is in my nostrils." That is, the spirit which God breathed into man at his creation. The only instance in the Bible where "spirit of God" is used in this sense.

Ps. 135. 17, "They have ears but they hear not, neither is there any breath (רוּחַ) in their mouths."

" 146. 4, "His breath (רוּחוֹ) goeth forth, he returneth to his earth."

Eccl. 3. 19, "Yea, they have all one breath (רוּחַ)."

Is. 33. 11, "Your breath (רוּחְכֶם), as fire, shall devour you."

Jer. 10. 14, "His molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath (רוּחַ) in them." So also ch. 51. 17.

Lam. 4. 20, "The breath (רוּחַ) of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, was taken in their pits."

Ezek. 37. 5, "Behold, I will cause breath (רוּחַ) to enter into you, and ye shall live." Comp. v. 6, 8, 10.

Hab. 2. 19, "Behold, it is laid over with gold and silver, and there is no breath (רוּחַ) at all in the midst of it."

2. Spoken of God.

Ex. 15. 8, "And with the blast (רוּחַ, breath) of thy nostrils the waters were gathered together."

2 Sam. 22. 16, "At the rebuking of the Lord, at the blast of the breath (רוּחַ) of his nostrils."

Job, 4. 9, "And by the breath (רוּחַ) of his nostrils are they consumed."

Ps. 18. 15, "The foundations of the world were discovered . . . at the blast of the breath (רוּחַ) of thy nostrils."

" 33. 6, "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath (רוּחַ) of his mouth."

Is. 11. 4, "And with the breath (רוּחַ) of his lips shall he slay the wicked."

Is. 30. 28, "And his breath (רִיחוֹר), as an overflowing stream, shall reach to the midst of the neck."

§ 3.

רִיחַ in the sense of Wind, ἄνεμος.

1. Simple air—once only.

Job, 41, 16, "One is so near to another that no air (רִיחַ) can come between them."

2. Common wind.

Gen. 3. 8, "And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day (לְרִיחַ יָמִים), in the cool or windy part of the day."

" 8. 1, "And God made a wind (רִיחַ) to pass over the earth."

Num. 11. 31, "The wind (רִיחַ) brought quails from the sea."

Ex. 10. 13, "The Lord brought an east wind (רִיחַ) upon the land . . . and the east wind (רִיחַ) brought the locusts."

" 10. 19, "And the Lord turned a mighty strong west wind (רִיחַ), which took away the locusts." So also ch. 14. 21.

" 15. 10, "Thou didst blow with thy wind (רִיחַ), the sea covered them."

Num. 11. 31, "And there went forth a wind (רִיחַ) from the Lord, and brought quails from the sea."

2 Sam. 22, 11, "He was seen upon the wings of the wind (רִיחַ)."

1 Kings, 18. 45, "Heaven was black with clouds and wind (רִיחַ)."

" 19. 11, "And a great and strong wind (רִיחַ) rent the mountains." Comp. what follows.

3. Violent wind or tempest.

2 Kings, 19. 7, "Behold, I will send a blast (רִיחַ) upon him."

Ps. 11. 6, "Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest (רִיחַ)."

" 55. 8, "I would hasten my escape from the windy storm (רִיחַ) and tempest."

" 107. 25, "For he commandeth and raiseth the stormy wind (רִיחַ), which lifteth up the waves thereof."

" 148. 8, "Fire and hail; snow and vapor; stormy wind (רִיחַ) fulfilling his pleasure."

Is. 25. 4, "A shadow from the heat, when the blast (רִיחַ) of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall."

Ezek. 1. 4, "And I looked, and behold, a whirlwind (רִיחַ) out of the north."

Hos. 13. 15, "The wind of the Lord (רִיחַ) shall come up," i. e. a great and violent wind.

4. The four quarters of the heavens from which the winds blow; a side, or point of the compass.

1 Chron. 9. 24, "In four quarters (רִיחוֹת) were the porters."

Ezek. 37. 9, "Come from the four winds (רִיחוֹת), O breath."

" 42. 16—20, "He measured the east side (רִיחַ, wind) . . . he measured the north side (רִיחַ) . . . he measured the south side (רִיחַ) . . . he turned about to the west side (רִיחַ) . . . he measured it by the four sides (רִיחוֹת)."

Dan. 8. 8, and 11. 4, "Toward the four winds (רִיחוֹת) of heaven."

Jer. 52. 23, "Ninety and six pomegranates on a side (רִיחַ, wind)."

Zech. 2. 6, "For I have spread you abroad as the four winds (רִיחוֹת) of the heaven, saith the Lord."

" 6. 5, "These are the four spirits (רִיחוֹת) of the heavens."

5. As denoting windy, empty, vain.

Job, 6. 26, "Do ye imagine to reprove words, and the speeches of one that is desperate, which are as the wind (רִיחַ)?"

Job, 15. 2, "Should a wise man utter vain knowledge (דַּעַר רוּחַ knowledge of wind)?"

" 16.3, "Shall vain words (דְּבָרֵי רוּחַ, words of wind) have an end?"

Prov. 11. 29, "He that troubleth his own house shall inherit the wind (רוּחַ)."

Eccl. 5. 16, "What profit hath he that hath labored for the wind (לְרוּחַ)?"

Is. 26. 18, "We have been with child, we have been in pain, we have as it were brought forth wind (רוּחַ)."

" 41. 29, "Their molten images are wind (רוּחַ)."

Jer. 5. 13, "And the prophets shall become wind (רוּחַ)."

Hos. 8. 7, "For they have sown the wind (רוּחַ)."

" 12. 1, "Ephraim feedeth on wind (רוּחַ)."

Mic. 2. 11. "If a man walking in the spirit (רוּחַ) and falsehood do lie, saying," &c. That is, with empty claims to being under the influence of the spirit.

§ 4.

רוּחַ in the sense of Anima, ψυχῇ, Animal Life, Vital Spirit, or the Principle of Life as embodied and manifested in the Breath of the Mouth and Nostrils.

The term in this sense accords so strikingly in import with נֶפֶשׁ, No. 3, that, as applied to man, it is scarcely possible to draw a clear line of distinction between them. There is this, however, to be observed in regard to them, that whereas נֶפֶשׁ is spoken frequently of beasts, we find but a single instance, Eccl. 3. 19, where רוּחַ occurs with that reference, and even there shall adduce evidence to show that it is so used in a rhetorical, instead of a literal sense. Nor can we positively affirm that several of the ensuing passages might not be more properly ranged either under the head of simple breath given above, or under that of mind or rational spirit, which follows. The actual usage can alone enable the reader to judge.

Gen. 45. 27, "And when he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent to carry him, his spirit revived (חַיָּתָה רִיחוֹ)." Revived is חַיָּתָה.

This denotes a revived and vigorous acting of the vital principle, which is generally indicated by a freer respiration, and which had been in a measure deadened by his previous grief. The literal rendering of the word for revived is lived. The life which had been comparatively dormant now lived again, as the life in Hebrew is frequently said to live.

Num. 16. 22, "O God, the God of the spirits (רִיחוֹת) of all flesh." This may import no more than the lives actuating all flesh.

Judg. 15. 19, "And when he had drunk, his spirit (רִיחוֹ) came again, and he revived." His vital energy was restored.

1 Sam. 30. 12, "And when he had eaten, his spirit (רִיחוֹ) came again to him." Same as the preceding.

1 Kings, 10. 4, 5, "And when the queen of Sheba had seen all Solomon's wisdom, and the house which he had built, &c. . . . there was no more spirit (רִיחַ) in her." There was a kind of failing or giving way of the powers of life. So also 2 Chron. 9. 4.

Job, 6. 4, "For the arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poison whereof drinketh up my spirit (רִיחוֹת)." Exhausts my life and strength. "Takes away my vigor, my comfort, my life." Barnes.

"10. 12, "Thy visitation hath preserved my spirit (רִיחוֹת)." My life.

Ps. 31. 5, "Into thy hands I commit my spirit (רִיחוֹת)." My vital breath.

"76. 12, "He shall cut off the spirit (רִיחַ) of princes; he is terrible to the kings of the earth." 'Spirit' here has doubtless the import of life.

Ecc. 8. 8, "No man hath power over the spirit (רִיחוֹ) to retain the spirit (רִיחַ), neither hath he power in the day of death." No man hath power over the spirit of life.

Eccl. 11. 5, "As thou knowest not the way of spirit (רוּחַ) nor how the bones do grow in the womb."

Here seems a designed contrast between the two constituent principles of man, the gross material body and the informing life or spirit.

Eccl. 12. 7, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit to God who gave it (רוּחַ)."

An allusion seems here intended to the original creation of man, when the body was first formed and the spirit or life breathed into it. This body is to be decomposed again into its original elements, and the informing life restored to the great Being who first imparted it. The amount of implication of mental faculties seems to be the same in both cases. Still we would not contend with any one who should hold that spirit in this passage is to be distinctly understood of the rational principle, more especially than of the vital. The two senses run so nearly into each other that it is difficult to discriminate them.

Is. 38. 16, "By these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit (חַיִּי רוּחִי)." That is, my life, says Gesenius.

"42. 5, "He that giveth breath unto the people, and spirit (רוּחַ) to them that walk therein." That giveth life.

Mat. 27. 50, "Jesus when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost (πνεῦμα)."

Luke, 8. 55, "And her spirit (πνεῦμα) came again, and she arose straightway."

§ 5.

רוּחַ in the sense of Animus, Πνεῦμα, Spirit, the Mind, viewed as the Seat and Subject of Thought, but more especially of Emotion, Feeling, Passion, and Affection.

Under the present head is to be classed an extended catalogue of passages in which, while we recognize a general community of import, we detect also various minor shades of difference that render an accurate discrimination extremely difficult. Of the two we think there can be little doubt that the term רִיחַ is intended to represent a higher element in our being than נֶפֶשׁ, though in many cases it will be found scarcely possible to distinguish their import. The dominant idea conveyed by רִיחַ, in its psychical relations, we believe to be that of feeling, of emotion, rather than of thought or intellection, though that is included. But we shall look in vain for any intimation of the intrinsic nature of that substance which thus thinks and feels—a point which we are left to determine, if practicable, by the lights of our own intelligence. The passage which comes the nearest to a scientific enunciation on this head, as already intimated, is Is. 31. 3, "Their horses are flesh, and not spirit (רִיחַ)," which certainly conveys the idea of a marked contrariety in the essential nature of the two subjects, without at the same time positively affirming in what it consists. In all other cases the term is employed exclusively with a moral or practical import, and recognizes only the common notions, which were not founded, in the minds of the Hebrews, upon any precise or scientific views of the true psychology of our being. Nothing more is assumed than that mankind are universally conscious of being possessed of certain feelings and promptings which in many cases refer themselves to a divine source, as is evident from the fact, that the operations of man's spirit are often ascribed to the influences of God's spirit. It is represented as being mainly through the medium of his spirit that man comes into conjunction with the Deity, the same term being applied to both.

A very frequent usage of the term is an adjunct to certain words expressive of various kinds of emotion, temper, or disposition, as a spirit of love, of hatred, of wisdom, of jealousy, of pride, of anger, of grief, of counsel, of adoption, of divination, of bondage, of burning, of error, of infirmity, of slumber, of judgment, of knowledge, &c., of which numerous instances are given below. Cases also occur in which a spirit is said to be taken from one and made to pass to another, as the spirit of prophecy.

(1.) Spoken of man and of Christ.

Gen. 26. 35, "Which were a grief of mind (בְּרִיחַ רוּחַ) unto Isaac and to Rebecca."

" 41. 8, "And it came to pass in the morning that his spirit (רוּחוֹ) was troubled."

Ex. 6. 9, "They hearkened not unto Moses for anguish of spirit (רוּחַ)."

Num. 11. 17, "I will take of the spirit (רוּחַ) which is upon thee and will put it upon them."

" 2. 5, "And the Lord took of the spirit (רוּחַ) that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders; and it came to pass that when the spirit (רוּחַ) rested upon them, they prophesied."

" 14. 24, "But my servant Caleb, because he had another spirit (רוּחַ) with him."

Deut. 2. 30. "The Lord God hardened his spirit (רוּחוֹ)."

Josh. 2. 11, "As soon as we had heard these things, our hearts did melt, neither did there remain any more courage (רוּחַ, spirit) in any man."

Jud. 8. 3, "Then their anger (רוּחַ) was abated toward him."

1 Sam. 1. 15, "I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit (קָשָׁת רוּחַ, sorrowful of spirit)."

1 Kings, 21. 5, "But Jezebel his wife came to him and said unto him, Why is thy spirit (רוּחַ) so sad?"

2 Kings, 2. 15, "The spirit (רוּחַ) of Elijah doth rest on Elisha."

1 Chron. 5. 26, "And the God of Israel stirred up the spirit (רוּחַ) of Tilgath-pilneser." So also "stirred up the spirit (רוּחַ) of the Philistines," 2 Chron. 21. 16. So also of Cyrus, 2 Chron. 30. 22. Ez. 1. 1.

Job, 7. 11, "I will speak in the anguish of my spirit (רוּחִי)."

Job, 15. 13, "That thou turnest thy spirit (רוּחַ) against God."

" 20. 4, "The spirit (רוּחַ) of my understanding causeth me to answer." "Meaning," says Mr. Barnes, "the emotion of his mind."

" 21. 2, "Why should not my spirit (רוּחִי) be troubled?"

" 32. 8,, "But there is a spirit (רוּחַ) in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding"

" 32. 18, "The spirit (רוּחַ) within me constraineth me."

Ps. 32, 2, "In whose spirit (רוּחַ) there is no guile."

" 34. 18, "And saveth such as be of a contrite spirit (רוּחַ)."

" 51. 10, "Renew a right spirit (רוּחַ) within me."

" 51. 17, "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit (רוּחַ)."

" 77. 3, "My spirit (רוּחִי) was overwhelmed." So also Ps. 142. 3.

" 77. 6, "My spirit (רוּחִי) made diligent search."

" 78. 8, "A generation that set not their heart aright, and whose spirit (רוּחַ) was not steadfast with God."

Prov. 11. 13, "He that is of a faithful spirit (רוּחַ) conceal-eth the matter."

" 14. 29, "He that is hasty of spirit (רוּחַ) exalteth folly."

" 15. 4, "Perverseness therein is a breach in the spirit (רוּחַ)."

" 15. 13, "By the sorrow of the heart the spirit (רוּחַ) is broken."

" 16. 2, "The Lord weigheth the spirits (רוּחוֹת)."

" 16. 18, "Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit (רוּחַ) before a fall."

" 16. 19, "Better is it to be of an humble spirit (רוּחַ) than to divide the spoil with the proud."

" 16. 32, "He that ruleth his spirit (רוּחוֹ) (is better) than he that taketh a city." So ch. 25. 28.

Prov. 17. 22, "A broken spirit (רוּחַ) drieth the bones."

" 17. 27, "A man of understanding is of an excellent spirit (רוּחַ)."

- " 18. 14, "The spirit (רוּחַ) of a man will sustain his infirmity, but a wounded spirit (רוּחַ) who can bear?"

" 29. 12, "A fool uttereth all his mind (רוּחַ, spirit)."
That is, a fool gives way to all his impulses.

" 29. 23, "Honor shall uphold the humble in spirit (רוּחַ)."

Eccl. 1. 14, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit (רוּחַ)."

So frequently in the context.

" 3. 19-21, "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preëminence above a beast; for all his vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth the spirit (רוּחַ) of man that goeth upward, and the spirit (רוּחַ) of the beast that goeth downward to the earth."

This is usually interpreted of the vital spirit of man and beasts, of which the one goes at death upwards, or "returns to God who gave it," while the other goes downwards to the earth, i. e. perishes. But we deem it well worthy of question whether the import be not simply, that there is, to the eye of sense, no difference between the destiny of man, whose spirit here on earth goes or aspires upwards, and that of the beast, whose spirit, or ruling instinct, tends or grovels downwards to the earth as its appropriate goal. In view of the fact that they both die and are turned to dust alike, who can discriminate between the final allotment of a being whose nature soars to heaven, and one whose nature gravitates to earth? We do not confidently affirm this to be the true sense, but we think it one entitled to attention. As there is no other instance in which רוּחַ is predicated of a beast, it seems reasonable to conclude that it is here used in a tropical sense to indicate the indoles, or genius, of the beast in opposition to that of man. It is said, indeed, v. 19, that all have one breath (רוּחַ), but in this case the allusion is undoubtedly to the breath of the nostrils, whereas in v. 21 the term points rather, if we mistake not, to the inner predominant characteristic of a rational nature. However this may be, we are by no means satisfied that the passage, on a fair construction, is designed to teach that brute beasts are possessed of that principle which in man is indicated by the word רוּחַ, spirit. But as the beasts evince what may be called a prevailing bent, the term may be metaphorically applied to them in this sense. In like manner though the term heart is not usually applied as a designation of any part of the nature of a beast, yet in Dan. 4. 16 we find it employed in that reference, but evidently in a metaphorical sense, "Let his heart be changed from man's, and let a beast's heart be given him." A beast's spirit is to be understood in the same way.

Eccl. 7. 8, 9, "The patient in spirit (רוּחַ) . . . the proud in spirit (רוּחַ) . . . the hasty in spirit (רוּחַ)."

" 10. 4, "If the spirit (רוּחַ) of the ruler rise up against thee."

Is. 4. 4, "When the Lord . . . shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit (רוּחַ) of judgment, and by the spirit (רוּחַ) of burning."

" 19. 3, "And the spirit (רוּחַ) of Egypt shall fail in the midst thereof."

" 19. 14, "The Lord hath mingled a perverse spirit (רוּחַ) in the midst thereof."

" 26. 9, "With my spirit (רוּחִי) within me will I seek thee early."

" 28. 6, "And for a spirit (רוּחַ) of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment."

" 29. 10, "For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit (רוּחַ) of deep sleep."

" 29. 24. "They also that erred in spirit (רוּחַ) shall come to understanding."

42. 5, "He that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit (רוּחַ) to them that walk therein."
54. 6, "A woman forsaken and grieved in spirit (רוּחַ)."
57. 15, "I dwell with him that is of a contrite and humble spirit (רוּחַ), to revive the spirit (רוּחַ) of the humble." So also ch. 66. 2.
57. 16, "For the spirit (רוּחַ) should fail before me, and the souls which I have made."
61. 3, "The garment of praise for the spirit (רוּחַ) of heaviness."
65. 14, "But ye shall howl for vexation of spirit (רוּחַ)."
- r. 51. 11, "The Lord hath raised up the spirit (רוּחַ) of the kings of the Medes."
- zek. 1. 12, "Whither the spirit (רוּחַ) was to go, they went." That is, whithersoever the prompting was to go; and so frequently in the same chapter, and in chap. 10.
3. 14, "I went in the heat of my spirit (רוּחִי)."
11. 5, "For I know the things that come into your mind (רוּחַ, spirit)."
11. 19, "And I will put a new spirit (רוּחַ) within you." So also ch. 36. 27.
13. 3, "Wo unto the foolish prophets that follow their own spirit (רוּחָם)."
18. 31, "Make you a new heart and a new spirit (רוּחַ)."
20. 32, "And that which cometh into your mind (רוּחְכֶם, your spirits) shall not be at all."
21. 7, "And every heart shall melt . . . and every spirit (רוּחַ) shall faint."
- dan. 2. 1, "Nebuchadnezzar dreamed dreams wherewith his spirit (רוּחוֹ) was troubled." So v. 3.
- [os. 4. 12, "The spirit (רוּחַ) of whoredoms hath caused them to err."
9. 7, "The prophet is a fool, and the spiritual man (אִישׁ רוּחַ, man of the spirit) is mad."

Hab. 1. 11, "Then shall his mind (רִיחוֹ) change, and he shall pass over, and offend."

Zech. 12. 1, "Which layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit (רוּחַ) of man within him."

" 12. 10, "And I will pour upon the house of David . . . the spirit (רוּחַ) of grace and supplications."

Mal. 2. 16, "Take heed to your spirit (רוּחְכֶּם)."

Mat. 5. 3, "Blessed are the poor in spirit (πνεύματι)."

Mark, 2. 8, "When Jesus perceived in his spirit (πνεύματι)."

" 8. 12, "And he sighed deeply in his spirit (πνεύματι)."

Luke, 1. 17, "He shall go before him in the spirit (πνεύματι) and power of Elias."

" My spirit (πνεῦμα) hath rejoiced in God my Saviour."

" 9. 55, "Ye know not what manner of spirit (πνεύματος) ye are of."

" 10. 21, "In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit (πνεύματι)."

1 Cor. 2. 11, "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit (πνεῦμα) of man which is in him."

In the following instances we note a marked distinction between flesh and spirit, which is doubtless equivalent to the distinction that obtains between a sanctified and unsanctified nature.

Mat. 26. 41, "The spirit (πνεῦμα) indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak."

Rom. 8. 1, "Who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit (πνεῦμα)."

" 8. 5, "For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the spirit (πνεῦμα) the things of the spirit (πνεῦμα)."

" 8. 13, "For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die; but if ye through the spirit (πνεῦμα) do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."

2 Cor. 7. 1, "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit (πνεύματος)."

1. 3. 3, "Having begun in the Spirit (πνεύματι) are ye now made perfect by the flesh?"

5. 17, "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit (πνεῦμα), and the Spirit (πνεῦμα) against the flesh."

6. 8, "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit (πνεύματι) shall of the Spirit (πνεῦμα) reap life everlasting."

(2.) Spoken of God.

As the usage under this head is quite extensive, and generally of uniform import, it will be unnecessary to go largely into a detail of passages. It will be observed that in some cases it implies, by anthropopathy, simply the breath, according to No. 1, above; in others it points to the divine intelligence; and in still another class to the divine influence or operation,—to that afflatus, impulse, inspiration, or efficacious energy which wrought upon the minds of prophets and holy men of old, whether in inditing the Scriptures or acting as the executors of the divine will in circumstances which required the exercise of supernatural endowments. This species of influence is expressively characterized by the apostle Peter (2 Pet. 1. 21), when he says, "Prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of old spake as they were moved (φερόμενοι) by the Holy host," where the original term is one that conveys a much stronger idea than that of the gentle sort of impression to which we apply the term "moved." It properly denotes their being acted by the divine impulse, borne away, rapt, transported, taken, as it were, out of themselves and possessed entirely by the power of God.

Gen. 1. 2, "The Spirit (רִיחַ) of God moved upon the face of the deep." The divine energy.

" 6. 3, "My Spirit (רִיחִי) shall not always strive with man."

" 41. 38, "Can we find such an one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit (רִיחַ) of God is?"

Ex. 31. 3, "I have filled him with the Spirit (רוּחַ) of So ch. 35. 31.

Num. 11. 29, "Would God that all the Lord's people prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them."

"24. 2, "And the Spirit (רוּחַ) of God came him."

2 Sam. 23. 2, "The Spirit (רוּחַ) of the Lord spake me."

1 Kings, 18. 12, "And it shall come to pass, as soon as gone from thee, that the Spirit (רוּחַ) of the Lord carry thee whither I know not."

Thou shalt be rapt in the Spirit in such a manner thy body shall be transported away. Thus Acts, "And when they were come up out of the water, the of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw no more."

1 Chron. 28. 12, "And the pattern of all that he had Spirit (רוּחַ)."

Job, 26. 13, "By his Spirit (רוּחַ) he hath garnished the heavens." By his omnipotent operation. "There is no evidence," says Mr. Barnes, "that Job refers to the Third Person of the Trinity, the Holy Spirit, as specially engaged in the work of creation."

Job, 33. 4, "The Spirit (רוּחַ) of God hath made me the breath of the Almighty hath given me life." the same as in the preceding.

Psa. 18. 15, "The foundations of the world were discovered at thy rebuke, O Lord, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils."

"33. 6, "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the hosts of them by the breath (רוּחַ) of his mouth."

"51. 11, 12, "Take not thy Holy Spirit (רוּחַ) from me . . . and uphold me with thy free Spirit (רוּחַ)."

. 104. 30, "Thou sendest forth thy Spirit (רוּחְךָ); they are created."

139. 7, "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit (רוּחְךָ)?"

ech. 4. 6, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit (רוּחִי), saith the Lord."

In a single instance we find the phrase "spirit of God" used to denote the human spirit or life as the product of the vine.

b, 27. 3, "All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit (רוּחִי) of God is in my nostrils."

at. 4. 1, "Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit (πνεύματι) into the wilderness." So also Mark, 1. 12.

10. 20, "For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit (πνεῦμα) of your Father which speaketh in you."

12. 18, "I will put my Spirit (πνεῦμα) upon him, and he shall show judgment to the Gentiles."

ake, 1. 80, "The child grew, and waxed strong in spirit (πνεύματι)."

4. 14, "Then Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit (πνεύματος) into Galilee."

hn, 3. 34, "God giveth not the Spirit (πνεῦμα) by measure unto him."

4. 24, "God is a Spirit (πνεῦμα), and they that worship him must worship him in spirit (πνεύματι) and in truth."

This might be rendered without the article, which is wanting in the original, "God is spirit," as the design seems to be to indicate the moral character of the Deity, rather than any metaphysical attribute of his being. God is essentially of the same nature with the influences of his Spirit, and therefore he is to be correspondently worshipped.

hn, 6. 63, "It is the Spirit (πνεῦμα) that quickeneth; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit (πνεῦμα) and they are life."

cts, 2. 4, "They spake as the Spirit (πνεῦμα) gave them utterance."

Acts, 6. 10, " And they were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit (πνεῦμα) by which he spake."

" 8. 29, " Then the Spirit (πνεῦμα) said unto Philip, G near and join thyself to this chariot."

§ 6.

רוּחַ in the sense of a Spirit, a Personal Agent, whether good or bad, whether spoken of Angels, Demons, or Men.

1 Sam. 16. 14, " But the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit (רוּחַ) from the Lord trouble him." So also v. 15, 16, 23, ch. 18. 10; 19. 9.

Had we no evidence from other sources of the existence and agency of such spirits, we might here and elsewhere understand by the term evil disposition, perverse prompting which is said to be from the Lord, because the result of the providential discipline which he exercises over all men, good and bad, and which, as in the case of the hardening of Pharaoh's heart, is said to effect what it merely permits and overrules. But as the Scriptures clearly acquaint us with the fact of the being and influence of such spirits, both angelic and demoniacal, there is nothing to prevent the term being understood in this and all similar places of real personal entities of a supernatural order.

1 Kings, 22. 21, 22, " And there came forth a spirit (רוּחַ) and stood before the Lord, and said, I will persuade him. And the Lord said unto him, Wherewith? And he said, I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit (רוּחַ) in the mouth of all his prophets." So also v. 23.

Job, 4. 15, " Then a spirit (רוּחַ) stood before my face."

Zech. 13. 2, " And I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirit (רוּחַ) to pass out of the land."

Mat. 10. 1, " He gave them power against unclean spirits (πνεύματα)." And thus in a multitude of instances of "casting out unclean spirits."

uke, 10. 20, "In this rejoice not that the spirits (πνεύματα) are subject unto you."

" 24. 39, "For a spirit (πνεῦμα) hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have."

By this is doubtless meant a phantom, such as Job describes, and of which he says, "I could not discern the form thereof; an image was before mine eyes," i. e. a shadowy semblance of a human form. See my work on the "Resurrection of Christ."

leb. 1. 14, "Are they not all ministering spirits (πνεύματα), sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?"

cts, 23. 8, "For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit (πνεῦμα)."

" 23. 9, "But if an angel or spirit (πνεῦμα) hath spoken to him, let us not fight against God."

leb. 12. 22, 23, "Ye are come . . . to the spirits (πνεύματα) of just men made perfect."

Pet. 3. 19, "By which also he went and preached unto the spirits (πνεύμασι) in prison."

The induction of examples presented above can scarcely fail to authorize the conclusion already suggested, that the word spirit, in reference to man, denotes a higher element of his nature than the word usually rendered soul. It is indeed unquestionable that in a multitude of cases it is impossible to distinguish between them, or to assign a reason why the one should, in a particular connexion, be employed rather than the other. In such passages, for example, as the following, it seems impossible to discover why ψυχή in the first might not be, with the utmost propriety, substituted for πνεῦμα in the second, and so vice versa: Gen. 35. 18, "And it came to pass as her soul (נַפְשָׁהּ, ψυχή) was in parting." Eccl. 12. 7, "And the spirit (רוּחַ, πνεῦμα) shall all return to God who gave it." So Ps. 88. 4, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) is full of troubles." Job, 21. 4, "Why should not my spirit (רוּחִי) be troubled?" Thus too Ps. 119. 28, "My soul (נַפְשִׁי) melteth for heaviness." Ps. 77. 4, "My spirit (רוּחִי) is overwhelmed." What assignable difference can be suggested in the import of the two words in these connexions?

The case is rendered still more striking where the same Hebrew term (רוּחִי) is rendered variously in the Greek, as Gen. 41. 8, "And it came to pass in the morning that his spirit (רוּחִי, ψυχῇ) was troubled." Is. 19. 3, "And the spirit (רוּחִי, πνεῦμα) of Egypt shall be troubled." A similar diversity of usage obtains in the Greek of the New Testament: John, 12. 27, "Now is my soul (ψυχῇ) troubled." John, 13. 21, "When Judas had thus said he was troubled in spirit (τῷ πνεύματι)." How, moreover, it may be asked, is "anguish of soul (נַפְשִׁי, ψυχῇ)," Gen. 41. 21, to be distinguished from "anguish of spirit (רוּחִי, πνεῦμα)," Ex. 6. 9; or "bitterness of soul," Job, 21. 25, from "bitterness of spirit," Gen. 26. 35? The identity of import in these texts is obvious, and the list might be greatly increased, and yet it is equally clear that in a vast multitude of instances a marked distinction is kept up, and forms of phraseology occur where the substitution of one for the other would violate the fixed analogy of diction, whether we can settle the grounds of that diction or not. Thus we never meet with the expressions "smiting the spirit"—"persecuting the spirit"—"lurking privily for the spirit," nor of the spirit's "hungering," "thirsting," "famishing," "being emptied," "filled," "satisfied," "living," "dying," "being destroyed," "being consumed," &c.—all these being affections predicable rather of the soul as a principle more nearly allied to the physical or corporeal, than we usually conceive of the higher and more spiritual element in our constitution. So on the other hand we meet with certain appropriated uses of the term spirit which would not admit, according to analogy, of the substitution of soul; as for example when the spirit is said to be "given," "put," or "poured" upon any one, to "rest" upon one, to "come upon" one, to "go up" from one, to "come forth" from one, to be "turned against" one, to be "ruled," to be "renewed," to "enter into" one, &c. This language is never used of the soul. So also no instances occur of the use of soul in such phrases as "spirit of wisdom," "spirit of jealousy," "spirit of judgment," "spirit of slumber," "spirit of meekness," &c.

On the whole we think it will appear that, as a general fact, the affections denoted by the word spirit are of a superior grade to those denoted by soul, and that, of consequence, the subject to which they pertain is of a higher nature. The evidence of this will rise upon us in proportion to the evidence that exists, derived from other forms of speech, that there is a real distinction intended to be affirmed between them. But how can we avoid this conviction with such language before us as the following? 1 Thes. 5. 23, "And I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." We are aware that this is often understood as merely recognizing, without sanctioning, a distinction that was popularly embraced in ancient times, and that the apostle's design was simply to intimate by a cumulative form of expression that he desired the preservation blameless of the whole man with all his powers, faculties, and affections, while at the same time he had no purpose of pointing to a threefold metaphysical division of the elements of human nature. But it must be admitted as in the highest degree probable, that if there actually is such a distinction it is alluded to in these words of the apostle. But that such a tripartite distinction in man is inevitably to be conceded is clear from the fact that he possesses some principle in addition to the ψυχή which distinguishes him from the beasts of the field. This can be no other than the πνεῦμα or spirit, between which and the body the ψυχή or soul is an intermediate element.

This distinction was clearly recognized in the ancient philosophies. The τρίμερής ὑπόστασις σώματος, πνεύματος, καὶ ψυχῆς, the three-parted hypostasis of body, spirit, and soul was familiar even among the fathers of the Christian Church, of whom no one is more explicit than Irenæus.* "There are three things of which the entire perfect man consists—flesh, soul, spirit—the one, the spirit, giving form, the other, the flesh, receiving form. The soul is intermediate between these two, and sometimes following the spirit is elevated by it, and sometimes consenting to the flesh falls into earthly concupiscences."

Origen speaks with equal distinctness to the same effect.† "There is a threefold partition of man, the Body, or flesh, the lowest part of our nature, on which the old serpent by original sin inscribed the law of sin, and by which we are tempted to vile things, and as oft as we are overcome by the temptation are joined fast to the devil; the Spirit, by which we express the likeness of the divine nature, in which the Creator, from the archetype of his own mind, engraved the eternal law of the honest by his own finger, and by which we are firmly conjoined to Him and made one with Him; and then the Soul, intermediate between these two, and which, as in a factious commonwealth, cannot but join with one or other of the former parties, being solicited this way and that, and having liberty to which it will adhere. If it renounce the flesh and join with the spirit, it will itself become spiritual; but if it cast itself down to the desires of the flesh, it will itself degenerate into the body."

* "Tria sunt ex quibus perfectus homo constat, carne, anima, spiritu, altero quidem figurante, spiritu, altero quod formatur, carne. Id vero, quod inter hæc est duo, est anima, quæ aliquando subsequens spiritum elevatur ab eo, aliquando autem consentiens carni decedit in terrenas concupiscentias." Lib. v. c. 1.

† Triplex hominis portio, corpus, seu caro, infirma nostri pars, cui per genitatem culpam legem inscripsit peccati serpens ille veterator, quæque ad turpia provocamur, ac victi, diabolo nectimur; spiritus, quo divinæ naturæ similitudinem exprimimus, in qua Conditor Optimus de suæ mentis archetypo, eternam istam honesti legem insculpsit digito, h. e. spiritu suo, hoc Deo conglutinamur, unumque cum Deo, reddimur; Porro tertia, et inter ea media, anima, quæ velut in factiosa republica non potest non alterutri partium accedere, hinc atque hinc sollicitatur, liberum habet utro velit inclinari; si carni renunciâns ad spiritûs partes sese induxerit fiet et ipsa spiritualis, sin ad carnis cupiditates abjecerit, degenerabit et ipsa in corpus. Sup. Epist. ad Rom. L. I.

It would be easy to multiply indefinitely quotations to this effect from similar sources, clearly setting forth a distinction which is clearly recognized in holy writ. Thus the apostle says, Heb. 4 12, "For the word of God is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit." That is, it penetrates with such a searching and discriminating power into the secret recesses of man's nature as to separate, like the knife of the dissector, things that are most closely joined together, and even to make a severance, as it were, between elements so intimately related to each other as the soul and spirit.*

* Mr. Barnes (in loc.) thus comments upon this passage: "The former word here, ψυχή, soul, is evidently used to denote the animal life, as distinguished from the mind or soul. The latter word, πνεῦμα, spirit, means the soul, the immaterial and immortal part; that which lives when the animal life is extinct. This distinction occurs in 1 Thes. 5. 23, 'Your whole spirit, and soul, and body;' and it is a distinction which we are constantly in the habit of making. There is the body in man—the animal life—and the immortal part that leaves the body when life is extinct. Mysteriously united, they constitute one man. When the animal life is separated from the soul, or when the soul leaves the animated body, the body dies, and life is extinct." This language is correct as far as it recognizes the distinction between the two principles of soul and spirit, but it is marked by some confusion in the use of terms, and by what we must deem an erroneous view of the true psychology of our nature; for (1.) It gives the designation soul to the spirit instead of the animal life, which is directly contrary to the obvious purpose of the apostle. The $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ is the animal life or soul in express contradistinction from the $\pi\upsilon\epsilon\delta\mu\alpha$ or spirit, being the principle which man possesses, in common with the lower animals. To take the term soul from this application and bestow it upon the spirit is entirely unwarranted. In strict propriety the soul denotes the psychical principle, and that only. (2.) Equally unwarranted is the intimation conveyed in the sentence in which it is asserted, that 'the $\pi\upsilon\epsilon\delta\mu\alpha$, spirit, denotes the immaterial and immortal part; that which lives when the animal life is extinct.' In strictness of speech the animal life in man, in the sense in which Mr. Barnes here uses the phrase, is never extinct, because that life is denoted by $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$, and the human $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ never dies. What the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ is to the life in the body that it is to it out of the body, not indeed from the immortality of its own nature, for in that case the beasts would be immortal, but from its connexion with the $\pi\upsilon\epsilon\delta\mu\alpha$, which is the true ground of man's immortal life, as it is by this that he is conjoined to the Deity, the great and only fountain of life. Life is not an object of creation. It is a perpetual influx from God. The receptacle of animal life, which in man is the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$, is created, and is just as much the subject of influent life after death as before. "When the soul leaves the animated body, the body dies, and life is extinct." The life of the body is extinct, but not the life of that which animated the body, i. e. the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$. The life of the caterpillar-body is extinct when the butterfly is evolved, because that life has now passed into the butterfly-body; the butterfly-body, however, remains still a mere receptacle of life. So with the life of man. His soul ($\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$) is not life, but a receptacle of life. The life of beasts, which is also but influx, returns and is reabsorbed into the infinite ocean of life, and the psychical vehicle is resolved back into its primitive elements.

In the Alexandrian philosophy in particular, which favored the Pythagorean and Platonic, the distinction above

The relation of the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ to the vital processes of the animal body is undoubtedly a subject involved in great obscurity, and one that forms the grand problem of physiology. Hitherto all efforts have been abortive to establish the existence of what is termed a vital principle as a physical agency in the elaboration and nutrition of the various organisms of the body. These organisms and their functions are beyond question the effects of a cause—the result of some kind of organific potency which we denominate life. It is we think equally unquestionable, that this last principle operates through the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ as an intermediate agent, inasmuch as when the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ leaves the body these processes all cease; and life is most adequately studied from the phenomena of its opposite, death. Still we are not competent to affirm that the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ is itself identical with mentioned is very plainly recognized, as they denominated the πνεῦμα as the rational soul (νοῦς, τὸ λογικόν, mind, that which reasons), and the ψυχὴ, the sensitive soul (τὸ ἐπιθυμητικόν, that which desires or lusts). Josephus also gives us intimations to the same effect. Thus, in his account of the creation (J. A. Lib. I. c. 1. § 2), he says, "God took dust from the ground, and formed man, and inserted in him a spirit and a soul (πνεῦμα καὶ ψυχὴν). Thus too in the apocryphal book of Wisdom, ch. 15. 11, "Forasmuch as he knew not his Maker, and him that inspired into him the soul (ψυχὴν) that worketh, and that breathed into him a living spirit (πνεῦμα)." In the book of Enoch, likewise apocryphal, (apud Fabric. Cod. Pseudep. p. 190,) we find mention made of τὰ πνεύματα τῶν ψυχῶν τῶν ἀποθανόντων ἀνθρώπων, the spirits of the souls of deceased men; and the vital power, any more than we can say that the brain is a thinking substance, because it is by means of it that thought is carried on in the present life. To our perception throughout a great part of the physical universe what may be termed the instrumental cause acts as one with the principal, which is in all cases the divine energy operating by influx. In the animal world, including man with all the other tribes, the ψυχὴ is most undoubtedly the element to which we are proximately to refer the vital processes, but still as a created medium or receptacle of the primary influent power of life, which is not created, but perpetually flows from the infinite source of all life. When therefore we predicate a vitalizing power of the ψυχὴ, and consider it as the organic agent which originally forms the body, and continually repairs its waste, we are not to lose sight of the fact that the real agency is the divine uncreated life acting in conjunction with the created mediate principle called the ψυχὴ. But this may be familiarly illustrated. In contemplating a steamboat in motion we distinguish three leading parts—the steam, the machinery, and the body or framework of the boat. The steam, the motive power, is the life or spirit of the whole, but this power acts immediately on the machinery. Now suppose the machinery thus acted upon by the steam, to be endowed with the power of forming or elaborating the body of the boat. This supposition will perhaps give us as clear an idea as we can form of the office of the ψυχὴ in its vital relations to the body. But we must be content with the simple fact. The mode of the operation inevitably eludes our ken.

again (p. 196), τὰ πνεύματα τὰ ἐκπορευόμενα ἀπὸ τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτῶν, ὡς ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς, spirits going forth from their soul as from the flesh. For ourselves we read in these extracts the intimations of a great psychological fact, viz., that the πνεῦμα is to the ψυχὴ—the spirit to the soul—what the soul is to the body. The soul (ψυχὴ) is a kind of involucrum to the spirit (πνεῦμα), which Plato calls the εἰδωλον, image, of the spirit. This ψυχὴ is the spiritual body or the body of the spirit, so called, however, not as denoting its true ontological nature, which is psychical, but rather its uses, as constituting the form through which the affections of the spirit manifest themselves.*

We are well aware of the difficulties which crowd upon our conceptions of this subject, from the fact that the ordinary usage of the word body suggests ideas drawn from material substances and forms. But as we have scriptural authority for the use of the phrase “spiritual body,” we must deem ourselves at full liberty to employ it in this con-

* “Visible form, or shape, including the mere internal organization, of which we become aware by research and observation, are but the outer appearances of the true form, because that is, abstractly considered, only the mode of being. But the visible external form corresponds to and represents the true internal form. By this it is not meant that there is an inner shape, of which visible shape is the image, but that the order, beauty, and adaptation to use of the true form are represented and revealed by the visible form, because of the correspondence between them. Thus, when more is known of the soul of man, it will be seen that its faculties, proportions, functions, and enjoyments, all exist in their own form, and are all represented by the corresponding visible form, which is its instrument and clothing. When this relation is seen, it will be readily believed, that the soul without a body is naked, joyless, nay impossible; that it must therefore have a spiritual body in the spiritual world. And this body must be the image of the material body, because the material body, being already in perfect correspondence with the soul, and so its perfectly adapted envelope, a spiritual body not in its image would be less perfectly adapted to be for ever its dwelling and instrument.” Parsons' Essays, p. 111. Boston, 1845.

nexion, notwithstanding any possible conflict with previous ideas. It is undoubtedly true that the term body is for the most part applied in common language to sensible material substances, yet as no word could be found more adapted to convey the idea intended, we see no reason for forbearing its use. It is inevitable, from the nature of the case, that spiritual objects should be denoted by terms drawn from the material world, and the mind naturally modifies their import according to the innate exigencies of the subject. In the present instance we regard it as certain that there is, in the constitution of man, a principle properly denominated ψυχή, which is the true seat and subject of what is usually called bodily sensation. It is certain, too, that this principle lives after death, and lives in connexion with another element of our nature called πνεῦμα, by which man is distinguished from the beasts that perish. These substances are both beyond the reach of our senses, and the intrinsic qualities of each baffle our comprehension; yet from the relation which we are forced to conceive of their sustaining to each other, we scruple not to say that the one is the body to the other. As it is through the gross material body that the ψυχή manifests itself in the present world, so we are warranted to infer that it is through the ψυχή that the πνεῦμα manifests itself in the other world; in other words, it performs for the πνεῦμα the office of a body, and is consequently so termed. As to the question of material and immaterial, we do not concede the justice of the demand, that we should attempt discriminations on this head, which our ignorance of the essence of matter and of spirit renders us incompetent. The point we are considering is one of scriptural usage and not of philosophical verity. The difficulty, on this score, is no greater and no other on our view than on that of the opposite view, if there be any opposite view. We do not see how it can be denied that the distinction for which we contend does exist. Man is assuredly at once psychical and spiritual. These epithets irresistibly refer themselves to two distinct principles of our being. The assertion of this fact imposes not upon the one party any more than the other the obligation of defining the intrinsic nature and properties of the two principles. Call the ψυχή what you please, material or immaterial. We know nothing about essence of either; but we know enough of the relation of the ψυχή to the πνεῦμα to affirm that it is to it a body in the sense in which that term applies itself to subjects of this supersensuous nature.

From the remarks now made the reader can scarcely be left in a mistake as to the true import which we think to be attached to the phrase spiritual body. Spiritual in this connexion is not to be understood in a metaphysical sense as distinguished from material, but in a moral sense as distinguished from fleshly, fallen, sensual. Metaphysically speaking the appropriate term is psychical body, but as the term psychical, like the term fleshly, has two senses, the one alluding to, but not defining, the substance called ψυχή, the other to the character superinduced upon it by sin; and as the apostle is here expressly contrasting the σῶμα ψυχικόν, natural body, with the σῶμα πνευματικόν, spiritual body, in moral rather than metaphysical respects, we must be governed in our interpretation by this fact. No confusion of ideas will result if we simply bear in mind, that as a fleshly body pertains both to saint and sinner, but in the one case as denoting sinful, sensual, corrupt, and in the other that which is composed of flesh, so also the term psychical is used with equal latitude. The spiritual man does not, by regeneration, cease to be psychical in the sense of having a ψυχή, but simply in the sense of having the ψυχή predominant in its sensual influences over the πνεῦμα in its spiritual or holy influences. It is only in its latter import that the apostle uses the term when speaking of the σῶμα ψυχικόν, the psychical body. Let this distinction be once understood, and the train of his reasoning will be dis-embarrassed of all difficulty as to any apparent conflict with the views of psychology developed in the preceding pages.*

A difficulty may here however be suggested, founded upon what we have elsewhere affirmed to be a fact of Revelation, that the wicked are not represented as partaking, in a true and genuine sense, of the Resurrection. Our Lord does indeed assert that "they that have done evil (shall come forth) unto the resurrection of damnation." But it is undeniable that the general tone of the New Testament declarations is quite different from this; and that too from the very necessity of the case. We have several times adverted to the fact of the intimate and indissoluble connexion between the regeneration and the resurrection of the saints. Their eternal life (ζωή), in the resurrection-state, is the completed issue of their spiritual life commenced here on earth in the quickening of their souls by the Holy Ghost from the death of trespasses and sins. This change is certainly not wrought upon wicked men, living and dying such; and how can they be subjects of the effect when they are not the subjects of the cause?

The conclusion is inevitable if the inspired representations on this theme be admitted. As the saints die to sin by reason of their mystic relation to the death of Christ, so they rise to newness of life on the ground of their relation to the virtue of his resurrection. "For if we be planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. . . . Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him; knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Here is the germ of the resurrection-life. So again, "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. And you being dead in your sins, and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him." Once more, "If then ye be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Nothing can be more obvious, from the tenor of these passages, than the indissoluble bond of union which connects the spiritual life of his people with the resurrection-life of Jesus, and it is a life which must necessarily, in the end, issue out into a finished resurrection with them also. This is in fact the law of resurrection with all its happy participants. They have begun even here to live their eternal life. The deposition of the mortal body is a mere circumstance in the career of their immortal and beatified existence. As they have already been raised in Christ, their future life after being loosed from clay is a resurrection life of course, because it was a resurrection-life before that event. Their dismissal from the body leaves their true life just what it was. And if it was a resurrection-life it will be, equally as a matter of course, in a resurrection-body.

* As I have inadvertently remarked in the work on the "Resurrection" (p. 115) that ψυχικός is always in the New Testament rendered natural, I will here adduce all the instances, besides those in 1 Cor. 15, where the word occurs. 1 Cor. 2. 14, "But the natural man (ψυχικός ἄνθρωπος) receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness to him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." James, 3. 15, "This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual (ψυχικὴ), and devilish." Jude, 19, "These be they who separate themselves, sensual (ψυχικοί), not having the Spirit." The whole number of cases is six, in four of which it is rendered natural, and in two sensual. In all of them its import is moral and not metaphysical. As however the term ψυχὴ denotes what we may term a metaphysical element in our nature, the fact of general usage offers no bar in the way of the sense which we assign to the epithet in reference to that part of man's constitution which survives death.

This will be the true resurrection, because it is the true life. But this resurrection cannot pertain to the wicked, because this life does not pertain to them. But do not the wicked live hereafter? To this we reply, In the same sense in which they live here. Nothing is more certain than that they exist, and yet nothing is at the same time more certain than that they do not live in the sense which is affirmed of the righteous. How can they truly live if they are dead in trespasses and sins? The fact is, the distinction in the life of the two classes is the distinction of the ζῶη and the ψυχή. The wicked in the present world live the life of the ψυχή, and in the other world they live the same. Their bodies there are psychical bodies, in the character of psychical, i. e. sensual, corrupt, sinful, just as their fleshly bodies here are fleshly in the same sense. The bodies of the saints there are also psychical, but in a different sense, just as their bodies here were fleshly in a different sense. They are now become πνεύματα, spiritual bodies, because they are acted by the life of the πνεῦμα, or spirit, which cannot be affirmed of the wicked. Now as it is this latter life which is alone denominated life, so it is the resurrection alone of these spiritual bodies which is truly called resurrection, and of this the wicked cannot partake, for the simple reason that they do not partake of the life which it involves. As to the words of our Saviour before alluded to, where he speaks of the doers of evil coming forth to the “resurrection of damnation,” we leave it to every one to interpret them as best he may, consistently with the expositions now given, the soundness of which we hold to be beyond the reach of denial, if there is any thing explicitly taught in Revelation. For ourselves we have no difficulty in regarding it as an accommodated and tropical form of speech. Resurrection signifies etymologically rising again; and as the wicked enter at death upon a continued existence, they may be said in that sense to rise; but not in the sense in which resurrection is predicated of the righteous. A “resurrection of damnation” is precisely the opposite of a “resurrection of life.”

CHAPTER IV.

נֶשְׁמָה (neshâmâh), πνοή (pnoë), Breath, Spirit.

THIS is a term applied occasionally to the soul or spirit of man, and like the preceding נֶפֶשׁ and רִיחַ, has also primitively the import of breath or breathing. Its verbal root, נָשַׁם, to breathe, is obsolete, but is doubtless to be classed with the family of words having the same sense, viz. נָשַׁב, נָשַׁךְ, and by transposition נָשַׁח. The twofold usage of נֶשְׁמָה is exhibited in the following passages, embracing all the instances in which it occurs.

§ 1.

נֶשְׁמָה in the sense of Breath.

Gen. 2. 7, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into him the breath of life (נֶשְׁמַת חַיִּים)."

" 7. 22, "All in whose nostrils was the breath of life (נֶשְׁמַת-חַיִּים, the breath of the spirit of life)."

Deut. 20. 16, "Thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth (כֹּל-נֶשְׁמָה, every thing that breatheth. Concr. for living or breathing thing)."

Josh. 10. 40, "He left none remaining, but utterly destroyed every thing that breathed (כֹּל-נֶשְׁמָה, Concr. every breathing thing)."

" 11. 11, "There was not any left to breathe (כֹּל-נֶשְׁמָה, Concr. every breathing thing). So also v. 14.

2 Sam. 22. 16, "At the rebuking of the Lord, at the blast of the breath of his nostrils (מִנֶּשְׁמַת רִיחַ אָפוֹ). So also Ps. 18. 15.

1 Kings, 15. 29, "He left not to Jeroboam any that breathed (כֹּל-נֶשְׁמָה, Conc. every breathing thing)."

1 Kings, 17. 17, "And his sickness was so sore, that there was no breath (נֶשְׁמָה) left in him."

Job, 4. 9, "By the blast (נְשָׁמָה) of God they perish."

" 27. 3, "All the while my breath (נְשָׁמָה) is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils."

" 32. 8, "But there is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty (נְשָׁמָה שְׁדֵי) giveth them understanding."

" 33. 4, "The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty (נְשָׁמָה שְׁדֵי) hath given me life."

The original expression in this and the preceding verse is precisely the same, and it is fair to infer that the meaning is the same. The LXX render in both cases by πνοή, breath, and the remote allusion is undoubtedly to the in-breathing of the Almighty into the frame of man when first created, and by which he became a living soul.

Job, 34. 14, "If he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath (נְשָׁמָה)."

" 37. 10, "By the breath (נְשָׁמָה) of God frost is given."

Ps. 150. 6, "Let every thing that hath breath (נְשָׁמָה) praise the Lord."

Is. 2. 22, "Cease ye from man, whose breath (נְשָׁמָה) is in his nostrils."

" 30. 33, "The breath (נְשָׁמָה) of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it."

" 42. 5, "He that giveth breath (נְשָׁמָה) unto the people upon it."

Dan. 5. 23, "God in whose hand thy breath (נְשָׁמָה) is."

" 10. 17, "Neither is there breath (נְשָׁמָה) left in me."

§ 2.

נְשָׁמָה in the sense of Mind, the Intelligent Principle.

Job, 26. 4, "To whom hast thou uttered words? and whose spirit (נְשָׁמָה) came from thee?"

That is, says Mr. Barnes (in loc.), "by whose spirit didst thou speak? What claim hast thou to inspiration, or to the uttering of sentiments beyond what man could originate? The meaning is, that there was nothing remarkable in what he had said, that would show that he had been indebted for it either to God, or to the wise and good on earth."

Prov. 20. 27, "The spirit (רוּחַ) of man is the candle of the Lord, searching the inward parts of the belly."

'Spirit' seems here to stand as a designation of the intelligence acting in the office of conscience, whose function it is to investigate and examine the inmost recesses of the heart. The words of the apostle, 1 Cor. 2. 11, are strikingly parallel; "What man knoweth the things of a man (his concealed thoughts and designs. Macknight,) save the spirit of a man which is in him?"

Is. 57. 16, "For the spirit should fail before me, and the souls (נַפְשֹׁתַי) which I have made."

This Gesenius understands as equivalent to vital breath, נְשָׁמָה, thus according with נְשָׁמָה, No. 2. It seems, however, more naturally to convey the idea of reasonable souls.

The above are all the cases in which רוּחַ occurs, and in only three of them do we recognize the sense of intelligence equivalent to spirit or mind. The use of the term therefore throws no special light upon the main theme of our inquiry. We give the instances, however, to illustrate the various diction of the Scriptures in regard to the general subject.

CHAPTER V.

לֵב (lēb), καρδία (kardia), Heart.

THIS word is also in all probability a primitive, though referred by lexicographers to the assumed verbal root לָבַב, of which the supposed meaning is to be fat. "The primary idea," says Gesenius, "lies in the slipperiness, lubricity, of fat things; which notion is expressed by the syllables לֵב, לָ; see לָבַב to be fat, חֲלֵב, חֶלֶב, חֶלֶב, חֶלֶב, to be smooth, slippery;

Sansc. lip, to besmear, to anoint. Hence לֵב, לִבָּב, (לִבָּהּ), the heart, as covered with fat, and therefore called also לִבָּב, fat." The word, like each of the preceding, yields also a denominative לִבָּב, which signifies privatively to be without heart, i. e. to want understanding. The relation of the substantive לֵב to the verb as a radical is so slight that we may justly consider it as a primitive, and in all probability as the parent source of our English word live, whence life. Rothe, in his "Psychologia Veteris Testamenti," p. 40, observes that in the Hebrew anthropology the blood is preëminently the seat of life, (see Gen. 9. 4), and as the heart is the fountain of the blood, it was a natural process to make the heart the seat and centre of the vital principle. This may account indeed for the formation of terms in our own and other languages traceable more or less to the Hebrew, though it can scarcely be deemed sufficient to establish the truth of the doctrine. It is certain, however, that the sacred writers make the heart, in an eminent sense, the seat of sensation, emotion, and affection, and so completely does this metaphorical sense of the term predominate over the literal, that comparatively few instances can be adduced where it bears unequivocally the import of that leading member of the human viscera. The following passages disclose the usage which comes nearest to the one in question, and even in regard to several of these it still remains doubtful whether the figurative sense is not the true one.

§ 1.

לֵב in the sense of Heart as a Physical Organ of the Body.

Ex. 28. 29, "And Aaron shall bear the names of the children of Israel in the breast-plate of judgment upon his heart (לִבּוֹ)."

2 Sam. 18. 14, "And he took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart (לֵב) of Absalom while he was yet alive."

2 Kings, 9. 24, "And the arrow went out at his heart (לִבּוֹ), and he sunk down in his chariot."

Prov. 4. 30, "A sound heart (לֵב) is the life of the flesh."

Cant. 8. 6, "Set me as a seal upon thine heart (לִבָּם)." Doubtful.

Is. 1. 5, "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart (לִבָּב) is faint." Probably figurative.

Jer. 4. 19, "I am pained at my very heart (קִירוֹת לִבִּי, the walls of my heart); my heart (לִבִּי) maketh a noise in me."

Ezek. 11. 19, "I will take the stony heart (לֵב) out of their flesh, and will give them an heart (לֵב) of flesh." So also, 36. 26. This, however, may be understood metaphorically.

Hos. 13. 8, "I will meet them as a bear that is bereaved of her whelps, and will rend the caul of their hearts (לִבָּם)."

Nah. 2. 7, "Her maids shall lead her as with the voice of doves, tabering upon their breasts (לִבְבֶהֱן, hearts)."

That the sacred writers do recognize the heart in its physiological character as the central organ of the system, is evident from that metaphorical use of the term by which it is applied to designate the middle, midst, or inner part of any thing, as of the sea, the heavens, &c. Thus,

Ex. 15. 8, "The depths were congealed in the heart (לֵב) of the sea."

2 Sam. 18. 14, "And he took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart (לֵב) of Absalom while he was yet alive in the midst (לֵב) of the oak," i. e. of the oak-forest.

Deut. 4. 11, "And the mountain burned with fire unto the midst (לֵב) of heaven." So καρδία τῆς γῆς, heart of the earth, Mat. 12. 40.

Ezek. 27. 25, "Thou wast made very glorious in the midst (לֵב, heart) of the seas."

Mat. 12. 40, "As Jonas was three days and three nights in USAGE OF לֵב, καρδιά, HEART.

the whale's belly ; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart (καρδιά) of the earth."

The instances now given are the principal which the scriptures afford of the primary or physical sense of the heart. We now come to the vastly larger list of specimens of its secondary or tropical sense in reference to the rational and sensitive principles of our nature, in which it markably accords with the Latin usage of cor in the phrase vir cordatus, a man of heart, i. e. an intelligent man, a man of understanding. Of these we propose to give only a sufficient number to illustrate clearly the usage.

§ 2.

or לֵב in the sense of Mind, Understanding, Wisdom, the Faculty of Thinking, &c.

1. Spoken of man.

- Gen. 6. 5, "And God saw . . . that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart (לֵב) was only evil continually."
- ' 31. 26, "What hast thou done that thou hast stolen away unawares to me (לֵבִי—Lit. stolen from my heart)," i. e. while I was unaware of it.
- ' 24. 45, "Before I had done speaking in my heart (לֵבִי)," i. e. in my mind.
- x. 28. 3, "And thou shalt speak unto all that are wise-hearted (לֵב חָכָמִים, wise of heart), whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom."
- Num. 16. 28, "Ye shall know that the Lord hath sent me to do all these works ; for I have not done them of my own mind (לֵבִי, heart)."
- Kings, 3. 9, "Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart (לֵב)."
- Leh. 5. 7, "Then I consulted with myself (לֵבִי, my heart consulted)."
- Job, 34. 10, "Therefore hearken unto me, ye men of understanding (לֵב אֲנִישֵׁי, men of heart, viri cordati)."

Prov. 7. 7, "I discerned among the youths a young man void of understanding (לֵב, heart)."

" 9. 4, "As for him that wanteth understanding (לֵב), she saith to him," &c.

" 12. 11, "He that followeth vain persons is void of understanding (לֵב)."

" 19. 8, "He that getteth wisdom (לֵב, heart) loveth his own soul."

" 24. 32, "When I saw and considered it well (אָסִיחַ לֵבִי, set my heart upon it)."

Eccl. 9. 1, "For all this I considered in my heart (לֵבִי) to declare all this."

" 10. 3, "When he that is a fool walketh in the way his wisdom (לֵבִי, his heart) faileth him."

Is. 10. 7, "Neither doth his heart (לֵבִי) think so; but it is in his heart (לֵבִי) to destroy."

Dan. 4. 16, "Let his heart (לֵבִי) be changed from man's, and let a beast's heart (לֵבִי) be given unto him."

Hos. 7. 11, "Ephraim is like a silly dove without heart (לֵב)," i. e. without wisdom or discretion.

2. Spoken of God.

Gen. 8. 21, "The Lord said in his heart (לֵבִי)," i. e. in his mind.

1 Kings, 9. 3, "I have hallowed this house, which thou hast built, to put my name there for ever; and mine eyes and mine heart (לֵבִי) shall be there for ever."

Job, 7. 17, "What is man that thou shouldst magnify him? and that thou shouldst set thine heart (לֵבִי) upon him?" i. e. make him the object of thy thoughts. So also ch. 34. 14.

" 9. 4, "He is wise in heart (לֵב) and mighty in strength."

" 36. 5, "He is mighty in strength and wisdom (לֵב, heart)."

Jer. 7. 31, "Which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart (לֵבִי)."

§ 3.

לֵב or לֵב as denoting the Principle which is the Seat and Subject of Sensations, Feelings, Emotions, and Passions of various kinds, as Love, Joy, Confidence, Hope, Hatred, Contempt, Sorrow, Despair, &c.

The instances under this head are by far more numerous than any other, and are entirely equivalent to those we have already cited under the preceding terms נַפֶּשׁ and רִיחָ. We barely present a sufficient number to serve as a specimen of the whole.

Ex. 4. 14, "He will be glad in his heart (לֵבו)."

" 7. 3, "I will harden Pharaoh's heart (לֵבו)." So often elsewhere.

" 35. 5, "Whosoever is of a willing heart (לֵב)."

" 35. 21, "Every one whose heart (לֵב) stirred him up."

Num. 32. 9, "They discouraged the heart (לֵב) of the children of Israel."

Deut. 28. 6, "The Lord shall give thee a trembling of heart (לֵב) and failing of eyes."

Judg. 16. 25, "And it came to pass when their hearts (לֵבָם) were merry."

1 Sam. 2. 1, "My heart (לִבִּי) rejoiceth in the Lord."

2 Sam. 15. 6, "Absalom stole the hearts (לִבּוֹת) of the men of Israel."

1 Kings, 21. 7, "Let thine heart (לִבְּךָ) be merry."

1 Chron. 15. 29, "She despised him in her heart (לִבָּהּ)."

2 Chron. 29. 31, "As many as were of a free heart (לֵב)."

Job, 31. 7, "Mine heart (לִבִּי) walked after mine eyes."

Ps. 34. 18, "The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart (לֵב)."

" 105. 25, "He turned their hearts (לִבָּם) to hate his people."

Prov. 11. 20, "They that are of a froward heart (לֵב) are abomination to the Lord."

- Prov. 22. 11, "He that loveth pureness of heart (לב)." der
- " 26. 23, "Burning lips and a wicked heart (לב) are like a potsherd covered with silver dross." imp
- Ecc. 11. 10, "Therefore remove sorrow from thy heart (לִבְּךָ), and put away evil from thy flesh." wh
- Jer. 17. 9, "The heart (לב) is deceitful above all things." tha
- Ezek. 13. 32, "Ye have made the heart (לב) of the righteous sad." ma
- " 28. 17, "Thine heart (לִבְּךָ) was lifted up." con
- Hos. 2. 14, "I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her (מְנַחֵם לִבָּהּ, to her heart)." of
- " 11. 8, "Mine heart (לִבִּי) is turned within me." per
- Am. 2. 16, "He that is courageous (בִּבְרָחָה, strong of his heart) among the mighty shall flee away naked in that day." Th
- Obad. 3, "The pride of thine heart (לִבְּךָ) hath deceived thee." gro
- Zech. 7: 12, "They made their hearts (לִבָּם) as an adamant stone." mu
- Mal. 4. 6, "He shall turn the heart (לב) of the fathers to the children, and the heart (לב) of the children to their fathers." Comp. Luke, 1. 17. it d
- Mat. 5. 8, "Blessed are the pure in heart (καρδια)." tha
- " 11. 29, "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart (καρδια)." sou
- Mark, 16. 14, "He upbraided them with hardness of heart (καρδιας)." any
- John, 13. 2, "The devil having put into the heart (καρδιαν) of Judas Iscariot to betray him." or
- Acts, 2. 46, "Did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart (καρδιας)." hea
- Rom. 2. 5, "But after thy hardness and impenitent heart (καρδιαν), treasurest up unto thyself wrath." to s
- 2 Cor. 2. 4, "Out of much anguish of heart (καρδιας) I wrote you," &c. nat
- Eph. 6. 22, "That he might comfort your hearts (καρδιας)." he der imp

wh tha ma con
of per Th gro mu it d tha
sou any or hea to s nat he sen nat
po na bod test ess ein

CHAPTER VI.

General Results.

THE reader has now had arrayed before him the evidence on which a judgment is to be formed of the Scriptural import of the word soul, and consequently of the degree to which it acquaints us with the true and essential nature of that part of our being. He has seen that the usage is, in many respects, peculiar, the original term ($\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$) sometimes conveying the import of breath, sometimes of life, sometimes of the principle which thinks and feels, sometimes of the person in general, and in some few cases of the dead body. The chain of relation or filiation by which these senses grow out of each other, can perhaps be traced without much difficulty in regard to most of them; but as to the last, it does indeed present a very remarkable apparent solecism, that the word which, in its dominant usage, designates the soul in contradistinction from the body, should be used in any case to denote the body itself whether viewed as living or dead. We have given, however, under its appropriate head, the only solution of the problem that we are prepared to suggest, viz., that the term ordinarily employed to designate the principle which mainly constitutes man, man, while he lives, and the existence of which is only assured to the senses by the body which it animates, is used to denominate the body after death. The usage is evidently founded upon the assumption that the soul is the true and essential man, and though this man here inhabits a gross material body through which his existence and properties are manifested, yet this body is a mere adventitious appendage to his essential entity, one which he lays aside at death, and which being forsaken leaves him still a perfect personal human being, as much so as the laying aside of his garments^a at night.

If then the question be asked, which of all these various senses is to be fixed upon as leading and paramount, we do not hesitate to answer, that of person. In other words, the soul is that principle in man which constitutes his true personality, and this is but another form of saying, that the soul is the man himself as a living, thinking, feeling, active being. We think it will unquestionably appear, upon a recurrence to the illustrations given above of the various usages of the term, that they easily resolve themselves into the prevailing sense of person, indicating that a man's soul is himself.^{*} This is clearly the import of a multitude of passages where the term is rendered life. Thus, "He that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life," i. e. himself. "The Son of man came to give his life a ransom for many," i. e. to give himself. "Have wrought falsehood against my own life," i. e. against myself. "God do so to me, and more also, if Adonijah have not spoken this against his own life," i. e. against himself. Let it be remembered that in these and other similar instances the original is the identical word which in our language is represented by soul. The verbal distinction of life and soul so familiar to us is not known in the Hebrew.

Viewed in this light the usus loquendi as displayed under ch. I. § 7, (p. 56,) cannot but strike the reader as very remarkable. There we find numerous instances like the following: "And he requested for himself (לְנַפְשׁוֹ, for his soul) that he might die." "Ye shall not make yourselves (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם, your souls) abominable." "Neither shall ye defile yourselves (נַפְשֵׁיכֶם, your souls).” “To bind his soul with a bond,” i. e. to bind himself. “The Lord hath sworn by himself (בְּנַפְשׁוֹ, by his soul).” “Think not with thyself (בְּנַפְשְׁךָ, with thy soul).” “He teareth himself (נִפְשׁוֹ, his soul) in his anger.” So the “losing one’s soul,” Mat. 10. 30, is distinctly paralleled by “losing one’s self,” John, 12. 25. This form of diction is very frequent in the renderings of the cognate Syriac and Arabic. Thus, Mat. 28. 6, “And he departed and hanged himself.” Syr. “Hanged his soul.” Heb. 10. 12, “By his own blood he entered in once into the holy place.” Syr. “By the blood of his soul.” Gal. 1. 4, “Who gave himself for our sins.” Arab. “Who gave his soul.” Gal. 2. 20, “Who loved me and gave himself for me.” Arab. “Gave his soul for me.” John, 21. 17, “When thou wast young thou girdedst thyself.” Syr. “Thou girdedst thy soul.” Lev. 19. 18, “Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.” Syr. “As thy soul.” Jer. 3. 11, “The backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than treacherous Judah.” Heb. and Syr. “Hath justified her soul.” The same usage is to be recognized in the following passages from the apocryphal book of the son of Syrach, or Ecclesiasticus: ch. 2. 1, “Prepare thy soul (ψυχήν) for temptation,” i. e. prepare thyself. Ch. 29. 19, “Forget not thy surety, for he has given his life (ψυχήν) for thee,” i. e. hath given himself. Ch. 37. 7, “From a counsellor guard thy soul (τὴν ψυχήν σου),” i. e. guard thyself.

^{*} Mr. Barnes, in commenting on Job, 33. 18, "He keepeth back his soul from the pit," remarks; "The word soul in the Heb. is often equivalent to self, and the idea is, that he keeps the man from the pit in this manner." So again in v. 22, of the same chapter, "His soul draweth near unto the grave,"—"that is, he himself dies, for the word soul is often used to denote self."

We see not what room can remain for doubt, that the dominant usage of the term soul in the sacred writers makes it equivalent to a man’s self, and the great question now before us is the question of Scriptural usage. If then a man’s soul is himself, even in the present life, and yet it is the soul which exists after death, is it not inevitable that we must carry the same fulness of import into the usage of the term in its relation to the soul as translated from the body into the world of spirits? The meaning of the word soul must be commensurate with the real truth of man's nature as man. If we can satisfy ourselves, on competent grounds, of the true constitutive elements of our being apart from the body, then we virtually attain to a correct definition of the term soul. Now it is clear, from what has been advanced above, that besides the body there enters into the constitution of our nature the two distinct elements denominated ψυχή and πνεῦμα. These both live after death, and live together. Yet in ordinary parlance it is usual to say that the soul lives when the body dies. The soul therefore cannot be a monad, a simple uncompounded substance, but the term must be understood as representing the complex idea of ψυχή and πνεῦμα, and this notwithstanding that soul is, in a multitude of cases, in actual usage, applied as a designation of the first of these principles in contradistinction from the second. It seems therefore essential to the just idea of the soul, as a term indicative of the future man, that it should embrace both these elements of existence, and we have already given our reasons for believing that the former stands to the latter in the relation of a vehiculum or body. It is no objection to this that we are wholly incompetent to disclose the inner essence of this principle and show how it is that it performs this office. Nothing in the scope or design of the present essay imposes upon us the responsibility of penetrating into the hidden recesses of our being and defining what our faculties cannot grasp. The true question is a question relating to the inferences to be drawn from certain facts which are admitted on every other theory as well as on our own. These facts are, that Scriptural usage makes clearly the distinction which we affirm, and that physiology as clearly recognizes it. For as it is obvious that the body, as such, is not the subject of sensation, this power must inhere in the ψυχή, which forsakes the body at death, and which can never be proved to have lost its sensitive attributes by such a change of relation. The whole force of the evidence bears in the contrary direction. As the ψυχή, during the life of the body, is the true seat and subject of what are ordinarily termed bodily sensations, so we deem the presumption perfectly legitimate, that it remains such when the body is abandoned. What else can be inferred when once it is admitted that the body is not truly the subject of sensation, as it certainly is not of thought? It is the interior man inhabiting the body that sees, hears, touches, tastes, smells. This power is indeed lost to the body when the soul forsakes it. But is it lost to the soul? Can we conceive of a human soul departing in its full integrity from its earthly tenement, and yet leaving behind it or losing in its exit those distinguishing properties which went to constitute it what it was during its connexion with the body? What adequate idea can we form of the disembodied man, if we suppose him, after death, to be an entity incapable of sensation? Admit that in the present life sensation is effected only by means of the senses; yet the senses are not themselves the sentient. The eye does not see—the ear does not hear—the hand does not touch—though it is true that they are respectively the mediums through which the interior power of sensation acts, and this power, we contend, is essential to the integrity of the soul or the man, and must go with him where he goes, and abide with him where he abides. We cannot conceive of the perfect man without it.*

If then it be conceded that the bodily senses are the mere organical functionaries of an intelligent percipient power or principle throned within, we say that the conclusion bears down upon us with commanding urgency, that what man is substantially here, that he is substantially here—

* “No man can show it to be impossible to the Supreme Being to have given us the power of perceiving external objects without such organs. We have reason to believe that when we put off these bodies, and all the organs belonging to them, our perceptive powers shall rather be improved than destroyed or impaired.”—Reid's Essay on the Origins of Sense, ch. I.

after. Must it not be so? Look at the phenomena of death. There is the eye in its perfect integrity, but it does not see. There is the ear in all the completeness of its mechanism, but it does not hear. There is the wondrous apparatus of nerves spread over the whole surface of the body, but it has no feeling. The seeing, hearing, feeling power or person has gone. The house remains, but the occupant has departed. Yet consider what powers, what faculties, what thoughts, what memories, what affections were comprised within the limits of that existence which had just before animated this living, moving, acting mass! Has that perished? Was it not the true man—the actual person in all his distinguishing attributes—which has now passed out of sight? That which is left behind, though it was all that was visible to the senses, was the mere temporary envelope of the indwelling spirit, and we never call it the man. It is now the corpse, and we speak of it, not as he, but it. We lay it out, we deposit it in the grave, we say that it turns to corruption. But the man, with all his distinctive attributes—his varied powers of thought, affection, and will—his true personality and character—survives this dislodgment from the earthly house, and goes in all his integrity into another sphere of being, where he lives subject to the same moral and intellectual laws that governed his existence here. The soul is the man.

Thus far we have seen how remarkably the results of our philological inductions agree with those of physiological science. But we have still more decisive testimony on this head. The narrative of the Apostle, 2 Cor. 12. 1–4, is an invaluable item of Revelation simply on the score of pneumatology. In that he informs that he was caught up to the third heaven and heard unutterable things which it was not lawful (i. e. possible) to utter, and yet he informs us that during the time he “knew not whether he was in the body, or out of the body,” thus proving the intrinsic possibility of translation to a state in which the subject shall possess the power of hearing while the material organs of this sense are in abeyance. Was it not the true person of Paul that was now for a time transferred to the spiritual world, and was he not in full possession of the power of sensation relative to the objects of that world ?

The same truth is taught us by our Lord's words to the dying thief : " Verily I say unto thee, this day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Thou—assuredly a designation of the person, for his body was to remain suspended on the cross. This person is denoted in Scripture language by the soul, which therefore is of necessity tantamount to all that we are naturally forced to understand as constituting the integrity of the man.*

It may now be asked how the common doctrine of the Resurrection can be made to consist with the view above

* We insert the following impressive extract in the hope that attention may be called to the volume of beautiful and profound Essays from which it is taken.

" Into the spirit-world man enters at death. While in this lower world his spiritual body was within his natural body, giving it life, and power, and sense. It was always his spiritual eye which saw, his spiritual ear which heard, his spiritual senses which took cognizance of all things about him. But while he lived in the material body, it was only through the material organs of that body, that the eye of his spiritual body could see and its ear could hear ; and for that purpose these natural organs were exquisitely fitted to the spiritual organs, which they served as instruments. But when these material organs or coverings fall off, the spiritual eye, the true and living eye, does not lose the power of seeing. It loses the power of seeing the material things for which it once possessed a material organ, and acquires the power of seeing the spiritual substances and forms which this material organ had veiled. So it is with all the senses and all the organs of the body. The man rises from that portion of earth which his soul once vivified ; rises with the spiritual body he always had, and rises in full possession of all his senses and faculties, into a world of spiritual substances, of which his spiritual senses and organs now take cognizance in the same manner as the material organs here perceive material things. In a word, Death is Birth, and there a man rises as before, but in a new world ; yet with all his organs, limbs, senses, faculties."—Essays by Theophilus Parsons, Jr., p. 30.

presented of the Scriptural usage of the terms in question? Is any thing wanting to our process of proof that the term soul really denotes the spiritual man and consequently implies all that can fairly be understood of the spiritual body? But the spiritual body is the body of the resurrection. Is this twofold? Is a spiritual body, which is to be prepared from the material relics of the present body, and to be forthcoming at the "end of the world," to be added to the spiritual body, which is truly indicated by the word soul, and which the righteous immediately assume at death? * We demand a candid and unequivocating reply to this interrogatory. It is plain that it can be answered in the affirmative only by denying the soundness of the whole train of exegesis embodied in the foregoing pages; and if this be denied we claim to be informed what is the sense of the terms brought under review? What is meant by the $\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$, in what respects does it differ from the $\piνεῦμα$, and how is the psychical principle of beasts distinguished from that of man? It must be seen by the light of a half-opened eye, that not merely negative but affirmative ground must be taken by the opponent of the views here maintained. If we have given an erroneous exhibition of the actual usage of the sacred writers in their application of these terms, or if we have drawn from it unwarranted inferences, let the fallacy of our reasoning be exposed, and not barely denounced as uprooting all established ideas of the true teaching of holy writ. We profess to have treated the subject in a legitimate and scholarlike manner, with the sole aim of attaining the truth involved in it. Let the argument be met in the same manner and in the same spirit. We have but the one object, common to all reverent and honest minds, to compass the true sense of the inspired oracles on a point of transcendent moment to every believer in the divinity of those oracles. It is possible that we may have erred in our interpretations, and he that shall show this, upon adequate grounds, will find his draft duly honored upon the profoundest gratitude of our heart. For the present we confess we see not what link is lacking in the chain of proof of our main conclusion, or what flaw there is in any of the links not lacking.

* The incongruity of the common view on this subject will appear still more palpable if it be borne in mind, that in the order of the divine economy it is the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ which really elaborates, by its inherent laws, the material body inhabited in the present life. To suppose then that the old body shall be raised and made to reclothe the separated spirit—waiving at present the insuperable difficulties which attend the supposition—is to suppose a complete inversion of the established mode of God's operation. It is to suppose a body superinduced upon the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$, which the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ had no agency in forming, and this to our thought is very much like the idea of the shell of an egg being superinduced upon the contents of the egg after they are all perfectly formed. The order of creation is that they shall be formed together. But is the Deity, it will be asked, restricted to the observance of his own laws? Does he not reserve to himself the right of miraculous interpositions when he sees fit? Undoubtedly he does, whenever a competent reason weighs with him to that effect. Here then the only question will be as to the fact of such a reason. Others may believe that it exists; we do not. We believe that the conditions of man's being in every stage of it are the result of fixed laws, and that there is nothing more truly miraculous in regard to man's assumption of the spiritual body, than there is in regard to his assumption of the natural body. But if one does not adopt this view without reasoning, it is not probable that he ever will with it. It is the fruit of a sentiment rather than of an argument.

We hold it to be unquestionable, that as a fact of general Scriptural usage, the term $\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$ =soul is employed by the sacred writers to denote the internal man in contradistinction from the body which he inhabits. But the same term is applied also to the beasts, from which it is evident that they possess the principle denominated $\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$ in common with man; yet it is not supposed that the beasts are immortal. The immortality of man, therefore, is based upon some other principle than the $\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$, and consequently we are forced upon the conviction that the $\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$ after death does not constitute the entireness of his being. In conjunction with the $\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$ there must exist a higher essence which shall be to it what the soul is usually understood to be to the body. We have already seen that in the economy of the corporeal structure the sensations pertain not to the body, but to the sensitive principle which lives in the body, and with which the inner spiritual essence more immediately communicates. But the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ is the sensitive principle, and constitutes undoubtedly the material of that exquisite apparatus by means of which the body is said to feel. The $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$, moreover, we are taught to regard as the grand intermediate agent in what are termed the vital functions, which we enjoy in common with the lower animals, and, in a still inferior degree, with the vegetable world. Of the intrinsic nature of this $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ we are ignorant; and to the question whether it be material or immaterial we are unable to return an answer, because we know no more of the intrinsic nature of matter than of that of spirit.*

* "The question respecting the internal nature," says Knapp, "and the quality of the human soul, is one of those difficult and obscure questions which can never be satisfactorily answered in the present life. It cannot certainly be decided by any thing in the Bible. The soul is there merely contrasted with the body (בשר , flesh). The latter, we are informed, will return to the earth from which God created it, and the former will return to God who gave it, i. e. produced it in a different way from the body. So much is perfectly evident, that the Bible always distinguishes between the soul and body as different substances, and ascribes to each peculiar properties and operations; and this is in full accordance with the manner in which this subject was understood and represented in all the ancient world.

"We should mistake very much, however, if we should suppose that the ancient Israelites, merely because they distinguished widely between soul and body, possessed those strict metaphysical ideas of the spirituality or immateriality of the soul, which are prevalent in the modern schools of philosophy. Such ideas are by far too refined and transcendent to belong to that age; as are also the pure metaphysical ideas of God, which now prevail. . . . The notion of the ancient world respecting spirit was by no means the same with that of our modern metaphysicians. And if the question of the perfect immateriality of the soul had been left to them, and theologians had stopped where the Bible does, and omitted those inquiries, the object of which lies far beyond their sphere, they would

But whatever be its nature, we infer its office hereafter from what we know to be its office here. Pervading, informing, animating during life every part of the corporeal structure, just as the water fills and saturates all the pores of the dripping sponge, the ψυχή is still but the receptacle of that higher spiritual principle which acts directly upon it, as the steam acts upon the iron enginery of the boat. The machinery is the true body to the steam which sets it in motion. But the steam and the machinery can exist apart from all connexion with the framework of the boat in mutual relation to each other, and so the ψυχή and the πνεῦμα—the soul and the spirit—can and do exist separate from the body which they energize on earth; and, thus existing, why is not the one the body to the other? What but the union of the two principles constitutes the real man of the other life? And here we are not to suffer the force of the evidence to be vacated by the difficulty of predicating body of that have done wisely. This doctrine respecting the immateriality of the soul, in the strict philosophical sense of the term, is of far less consequence to their religion than is commonly supposed. The reason why so much importance has been supposed to attach to this doctrine is, that it was considered as essential to the metaphysical proof of the immortality of the soul. But since the immateriality of the soul, in the strictest sense, can never be made fully and obviously certain, whatever philosophical arguments may be urged in its favor, the proof of immortality should not be built upon it. Nor were the fine-spun theories of immaterialism ever resorted to by theologians to prove the immortality of the soul, or ascribed by them to the Bible, until Hobbes, Toland, De la Mettrie, and other materialists, had so perverted the doctrine of materialism, as to deduce from it the destructibility of the soul, or its annihilation at the death of the body. But in truth, the immortality of the soul does neither depend for proof upon its immateriality, nor can be certainly deduced from it. It is possible for one to doubt whether the strict immateriality of the soul can be proved, and yet to be convinced of its immortality. The strongest advocates of immateriality must allow that God might annihilate a spirit, however simple its nature might be. Why then, on the other hand, might he not make a substance not entirely simple, immortal?—Christian Theology, Vol. II, p. 372-74.

which comes not under the usual conditions of matter, and sustains not the usual relation of material substances to space. We do not refuse to acknowledge the possession by angels of some kind of bodies. What greater difficulty in conceiving the same endowment in regard to translated human beings?*

* " 'THERE IS A SPIRITUAL BODY.' It is then body, and not mere spirit, to which the reasoning of the apostle relates. He is treating of the transition which human nature is destined to pass through from one condition of corporeal existence to another; and he speaks of the laying down a body that is gross, or at least infirm, perishable, and ignoble, and the taking up a body that shall be potent, illustrious and permanent. . . . That which Christianity requires us to believe is the actual survivance of our personal consciousness embodied, and the perpetuity of our sense of good and evil, and our continued sensibility of pain and pleasure, and the unbroken recollection, in another life, of the events and affections of another state. What Christianity affirms is, that the LIFE—moral, intellectual, and active or corporeal—is not commensurate with, or dependent upon, animal organization; but that it may and that it will spring up anew from the ruins of its present habitation. 'Destroy this body,' and the man still lives: but whether he might live immaterially is a mere question of philosophy which the inspired writers do not care to decide. In almost all instances it is with facts, rather than with abstruse principles, that they have to do; and in relation to our present subject, after having peremptorily affirmed that human nature is to survive in another state, and is to rise embodied from the ashes of its present animal organization, St. Paul leaves speculation at large, neither denying nor affirming any hypothesis that may consist with the fact which alone is important to our religious belief, (the fact, viz., that man lives after death in a body.)

"Let it then be distinctly kept in view, that although the essential independence of mind and matter, or the abstract possibility of the former existing apart from corporeal life, may well be considered as implied in the Christian scheme, yet an actual incorporeal state of the human soul, at any period of its course, is not necessarily involved in the principles of our faith, any more than it is explicitly asserted. This doctrine concerning what is called the immateriality of the soul should ever be treated as a merely philosophical speculation, and as unimportant to our Christian profession. The question concerning pure immateriality, we regard as having been passed untouched, by St. Paul; nor do we consider it as in any specific manner important to the inquiries upon which we are about to enter."—Physical Theory of Another Life, p, 15.

There can be no doubt, however, that our ideas on this subject become inadequate and confused, from the fact that the distinction which we have intimated as subsisting between what we term the psychical and spiritual elements of our nature is not clearly recognized in the prevailing diction of the sacred writers. They speak of the soul or inner man as a one, as a simple, just as they often speak of the outer man, or that man which in this life we know to be composed of body and mind. They leave the verity of our being to be discovered by such researches and inductions as constitute the province of anthropology, guided by a comparison of all the forms of speech which the Scriptures themselves afford. From these sources we learn that the above distinction must necessarily be made, and consequently that the soul, in this sense, is in fact a complex, the analysis of which leaves us with the inference that man's spirit departs from the body of flesh clothed with a psychical body, which in common parlance is termed spiritual, not from its essential nature, but from its superadded character. This, we conceive, developes to us the true theory of the resurrection, and the conclusion can only be denied by denying the justness of the premises.

It is for the physiologist to discover, if he can, the intrinsic qualities of the ψυχή and the modus operandi of its organic powers. This is by no means incumbent on him who professes simply to establish the facts of the inspired verbal usage which obtains in regard to the general theme. We may say, however, on this head, that the phenonema of the vital processes, of sensation, digestion, and nutrition, do unquestionably connect themselves with the aerial, electrical, and galvanic agencies which are incessantly at work around us and within us, and that in some way, at present unknown to us, the psychical element of man enters into the closest relation with these invisible substances. The assertion of this fact amounts not to the position that life is identical with any of them, nor does it afford any just ground for a carping cavillation, as if really propounding a wild and visionary theory of a spiritual body constructed of material elements. We advance no theory on the subject. We know nothing of the internal essence of matter. We recognize simply the existence of certain facts in physical science which no man can deny without publishing an affidavit of his own ignorance, and these facts we place by the side of certain scriptural formulas of speech, and call upon the reader to collate their respective testimony to the truth and soundness of the conclusions we draw from them. The great question to be decided is, whether the language of Scripture on the subject before us conveys an absolute truth. Do the terms employed compel us to recognize in man's psychological constitution another principle in addition to the $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$? If they do, have we rightly stated the distinction? The demand cannot be unreasonable, that the error should be clearly pointed out, and especially that the relation which these two elements sustain to each other should be definitely disclosed.

The bearing of the whole discussion thus far pursued on the doctrine of the Resurrection cannot but be perceived at a glance. If the train of reasoning now presented be sound, the inference would seem to follow irresistibly that we have found the resurrection-body in the soul itself. But if the resurrection-body be a spiritual body, and if such a body, as we have defined it, be involved, in the nature of the case, in the soul, we cannot but inquire what are the grounds for anticipating the resuscitation of the old, decayed, dissipated, and vanished body of flesh? Even if it should be recalled from the vasty deep of past existences, and should come forth at the divine bidding, still what end is to be answered by it? Is the first spiritual body with which the spirit enters the world of spirits to be laid aside, and a second spiritual body, constructed of the materials of the fleshly body, to be substituted in its place? If so, where is the scriptural evidence of the fact? Or is the second spiritual corporeity to be added to the first? If so, where, again, is the evidence of this? If it be admitted—what we contend cannot be consistently denied—that the soul necessarily supposes a body, then the belief of the assumption of another body must rest upon the anticipation, and this upon the divine declaration, of some great and stupendous change in the conditions and relations of our being at the period when it is supposed to occur. If there is to be no essential change of condition or relation, it seems difficult to conceive a reason for the laying aside of one spiritual body and the assumption of another, or for the addition of one to another, even granting that either could reasonably come within the range of our thoughts. If there is to be such a marked crisis in the future lot of man, as to warrant the theory of the resurrection of the former body, whatever transforming or spiritualizing process it may undergo, it would seem necessary to suppose it one that should involve a transfer of departed spirits to some new sphere of existence; for if they pass into the world of spirits with bodies adapted to that world, why should we suppose any change as long as they remain there?

But on this point we are ready at once to take the position, that the Scriptures, rightly interpreted, give no intimation of any such transfer, nor, consequently, of any such corresponding bodily change. If such an event is in prospect, it must be at what is termed the “end of the world,” to which the prevalent notions of the Christian world assign the so called general resurrection, general judgment, second personal advent of Christ, &c. But a stricter exegesis of the inspired language, which we have attempted in the work on the Resurrection, dissipates the basis on which such an expectation rests, and resolves the various proof-texts into the enunciation of a spiritual process of the divine administration which is even now going on.

As to the idea, more or less current among good men, that the globe which we now inhabit is to be in some way subjected to the action of a purgatorial fire, which is to transmute and purify and sublimate its substance so as to render it a fit abode for the risen righteous, we know not of a single passage in the compass of revelation which can be fairly construed in support of that theory. As we have elsewhere remarked, "The language of holy writ is unequivocal, that the bodies of the resurrection are spiritual; and how can spiritual bodies inhabit a material earth? The two things we scruple not to pronounce incompatible with each other, as far as human reason is competent to form a judgment. The material world was made for men possessed of material bodies, and the spiritual world for spiritual beings; and from the spiritual world we of course exclude all our ordinary ideas of matter. The saints enter into 'houses not made with hands eternal in the heavens.' No intimation is given of their being transferred to earth. We do not deny that there may be a communication between these two worlds. The glorified dwellers in the heavenly sphere may honor with their visits the humbler inmates of the terrestrial mansions, as angels have often done in ages past; but we still affirm that neither reason nor revelation gives any countenance to the conceit that the beatified hosts of heaven, with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—with patriarchs and prophets—are, at any period of time or eternity, to sojourn for permanence in these terraqueous abodes. Heaven is the place for the spirits of just men made perfect, and heaven alone. Every class of beings is adapted to the element in which it is designed to live. Neither bodiless spirits nor spiritualized bodies are adapted to the element of earth on which our bodies of flesh and blood reside." (Nebuchadnezzar's Vision, p. 131.)

If then the scriptural evidence of any such future change is entirely lacking, what grounds exist for the belief that it will ever occur, or that the spiritual bodies which we assume at death will ever be superseded or laid aside? What adequate reason, then, have we for the expectation, that the decomposed and dispersed fabrics of our present bodies will ever be reconstructed and made a second time to invest their once tenanting spirits?

If it be said in reply that this is a subject so far transcending all the previous conceptions of the human mind, and resting so simply and entirely on the authoritative announcements of Revelation, that no inquiry is to be urged as to the reasons and ends of the sublime procedure, we at once rejoin, that God has so constituted us that we cannot help propounding queries on this head; especially when we find other portions of this same authoritative record abounding with intimations that force upon us conclusions directly at variance with what is deemed the most obvious import of its letter in the passages insisted upon. Does the inspired word thus speak with a divided voice? Does it require us to hold our reason in abeyance, and receive implicitly both sides of an opposite testimony? Is not the proof as clear from the citations above adduced that the good man assumes a spiritual body at death as it can be from any other passages that he does not receive that body for an indefinite tract of ages, and in connexion with an event which can never be shown to have been predicted? Is this apparent contrariety of the divine teaching to be piously blinked by the believer for fear he should honor philosophy at the expense of faith? For ourselves we have not so learned the oracles of truth. We find no demand made upon our reason for a suppression of its dictates in order to a due reverencing the word of inspiration. We perceive no difficulty in so interpreting the divine announcements as to bring them into harmony with our human deductions. We are conscious of no necessity to admit a construction of one part of Scripture that shall set it at war with another; and yet this is the alternative which we charge upon the common interpretation of those portions of the sacred volume which relate to the Resurrection—with how much justice we leave it to the reader to judge. We know nothing of the presumption often affirmed of any attempt to bring the divine procedures within the range of our intelligence. Nor can we rest satisfied with resolving into sheer omnipotence the accomplishment of results which involve ideas incompatible with each other.

Such we have found to be the amount of nearly all the argument bestowed upon the work which has given occasion to the present Essay. Thus, in one of the most stringent reviews of the "Anastasis," (Biblic. Repos. for April, 1845,) the author assumes to state a common sense view of the subject, and to draw up a declaration of his faith in the following terms: "'I believe in the existence of God, possessing infinite intelligence and almighty power. I believe that He has revealed the future resurrection of the bodies of the dead. I believe that He has revealed it in such a way, and by the use and application of such terms and sentences, as that the most direct, natural, and obvious impression would be, that there is to be an identity of some kind between the body that dies and the one that is to be raised. As I am a common man, and not qualified either to apprehend or answer very acutely philosophical difficulties, I still further believe that the God I worship is perfectly competent to secure this identity; that He has such a sovereign control over the present destiny of elementary particles and organized masses, that whatever is necessary to be done in the premises to realize the truth of a biblical doctrine, He can and will do.' This is my creed, as a plain common Christian, compelled to interpret the Bible in its most obvious and natural sense, never having studied Greek or Hebrew; and assuming that the standard English version does not so far differ from the original text, as to create a dense cloud of appearances, where there are no realities. Has the author any objection to this creed? Does it not involve philosophy enough to meet all the practical demands of a reasonable faith? We wait for an answer." p. 246.

The answer we will shortly give after adverting to some other positions in the same article. Thus, "I now come to the point, where the philosophy of the author is entirely at issue with common sense, with what is appropriate to nature, and descriptive of things as they are. He introduces a fallacy into his own mind by the use of the word body, as applied to human beings. The man at seventy has changed the particles of his body ten times, and therefore has had ten different bodies. Suppose we grant the premise; the conclusion does not follow. What do we mean by body in this application? We mean the organized and living whole, as such. The continuity of a material and vital organization, as a general aggregate—with the same inhabiting spirit—subject to the same laws of life—this is the common, as it is the philosophical, idea of the present identity of the body. We apply the term body to the vital aggregate, as such; and if this remain, though the individual particles should change ten thousand times, it is the same body: it is, in the true and proper sense, but one body. If I should lose one of my fingers, will any man in his senses say I that have lost any portion of my identity as a body?—If by the process of phlebotomy I should lose a pint of blood, is my identity as a body impaired?—Not in the slightest degree, unless we are to have a new dispensation of exegesis upon the terms body and identity in this application. The author's view, that a change of particles is continually impairing the identity of the body as an organized aggregate, and giving us new bodies, carries along with it this consequence—viz., it is as difficult to admit the continuous identity of the present body in any sense, as to admit the identity of the present body and the resurrection body. His argument operates as severely on earth, as it does in eternity. And before we can admit its soundness here, we must have a new dispensation of philosophy and common sense." p. 251,

So also, p. 252, "Our spontaneous self-knowledge gives us one and the same body through the whole course of our present being, in the very same sense in which it gives us a body at all. And if we may have the same knowledge in respect to identity between the present and the future body, the author may be left to play with the particles at his pleasure." And again, p. 262, "Give me an identity between the present and future body for the residence of the soul, as complete, substantial, and real, as that of my present body during successive periods, and I ask no more. And if in the latter case I may have it with an entire change of elementary particles, why may I not equally have it in the former?" Finally, he affirms the identity between the present and future body, to be one that has reference mainly to the spontaneous impressions, judgments, or cognitions of the soul (that is) to be seated in the body—an idea which he thus expands: "A man lives and dies. After death his spirit goes to the God that gave it, and his body back to the dust. At the resurrection his spirit enters into, and is united with, a spiritual body—material in one respect, but spiritual in another—a body in some respects entirely different from the one he had at death, but in other respects like it. The spontaneous impression and view of the man himself, as of those who know him, are those of sameness, both as to body and soul, abating the admitted but consistent differences between the present and future body. His body is the same, in this sense at least, that it is known as such, and is the seat of the same intelligence. Will this not give us an identity of body, substantially the very one which we have in the present life? Our bodily identity here is such mainly in reference to our intelligence, as a continuous seat of the same—such in reference to the spontaneous impressions and judgments of that intelligence—not affected by the flux and change of particles." p. 263.

Now in reference to this whole line of argument it is clear that it makes the identity between the present body and the body of the resurrection to be of the same kind with the identity of the body in successive periods in the present life, and this he resolves into an identity resting upon certain "spontaneous impressions, judgments, cognitions," &c. The fact is admitted that the body may be actually changed as to every one of its constituent particles several times during life—that its "atomic identity" is repeatedly lost—and yet the writer persists in maintaining, that the body is all the while the same body as an "organized aggregate," of which we are assured by "spontaneous impressions, judgments, and cognitions." Our reply to this is, that we do not admit the soundness of this sense of bodily identity, and that for the reason, that the positions assumed involve a contradiction in terms. Whatever may be our "spontaneous impressions, judgments," &c., they can never countervail the evidence of physiological facts, that the constituent particles of our present bodies do actually every one of them in process of time pass away, to be replaced by others. Consequently the whole substantial mass of our bodies is sooner or later changed, and that which is thus changed in the sense of one thing being substituted for another cannot in philosophical strictness still be the same. This it is superfluous to attempt to prove, because it is self-evident. I may hold a ball of snow or ice in my hand till it melts and drops into an empty bowl in the form of so much water, and I may properly say the water is the same with the snow or ice. But I cannot substitute one ball of snow for another and say either that that or the water formed from it is the same with the preceding. So in regard to the human body. It is impossible that the body which my soul inhabits to-day should be identical with the body which it inhabited ten years ago, if in the meantime every particle which then constituted it has passed away. It may indeed answer the same purpose to the soul—it may stand in the same relation to it—the "spontaneous impressions, judgments," &c., may not recognize any difference—yet the sun in the heavens is not more palpably obvious to the senses than that the one is intrinsically totally different from the other. The fact is, these "spontaneous impressions," upon which the language of common parlance in reference to the subject is founded, are an entirely fallacious criterion of the truth. Our consciousness assures us only of the present possession, at each successive moment, of a body as the seat of the soul. It does not assure us of the continued identity of that body; and as the clearest demonstrations of physiology establish the fact of the perpetual flux of the component particles, it is nothing short of a downright outrage of common sense to affirm a continued identity of that which is at the same time the subject of continued change. The question in debate cannot be determined by consciousness, nor by an appeal to familiar usages of speech. It is a pure question of scientific or philosophic verity, and the true decision can be sought only at the true tribunal.

What approximation then, we ask, is made towards the truth by affirming that the identity between the buried and the risen body is the same with that which exists between the present body during successive periods? We have seen that that identity is a mere fallacy—a pure creature of the imagination. One body is here succeeded by another and a totally different body. The soul is conscious at any given period only of the body that it now has, but not of the process by which one has been removed and another substituted. This process we learn from other sources, yet the evidence from these sources is no less imperative than that of consciousness.* Where then is the proof that the body of the resurrection is the same with the body of the present life in any of its successive stages? And if it is not the same as to substance, in what respect is it the same? Our critic replies, "It is the same, in this sense at least, that it is known as such, and is the seat of the same intelligence." Undoubtedly the future body will be known as a body, and it will be known too as the seat of the same intelligence. But what of that? The question is, will it be known as the same body—the same in substantial entity? If so, with which of the several successive bodies will it be identical? Here, alas! is the point where the most urgent interrogation uniformly fails to call forth any definite reply. "The reviewer is very ready to confess his want of certain knowledge as to the manner in which the relation of identity or sameness is to be established between the two bodies." But, our dear reviewer, the question between us is a question not so much as to the manner, as it is as to the fact, of such an alleged relation. Produce the evidence of the fact, and we will consent that you shall wave all exposition of the manner. And

* In contrast with the above remarks we give the following sentences from the Princeton review of the work on the "Resurrection," leaving it to the reader to judge to which view of the subject truth inclines.

"It is a fact that in this life personal identity is never dissociated from bodily. We carry through all the changes of the body as clear a conviction of bodily identity as of mental. Sameness of body is here involved in sameness of person, and is, in this life, never separated from it. Through all the processes of abstraction and accretion, incessant in our mortal frame, no man ever yet conceived himself to have another body.

And this sameness of body has nothing to do with sameness of particles. It is not a conclusion of reason, but a fact of consciousness!"

This is certainly a new office of consciousness, to testify directly contrary to known truth. But what will reviewer say if we affirm, as we do, that consciousness, in the strictest propriety of speech, does not assure us of the existence of a body at all? Consciousness assures us only of what comes within the sphere of its operations, and these are sensations, affections, and thoughts. It is by a subsequent process of mind that we refer our sensations to a body. It is indeed a process involving an infallible intuition, but it is one which transcends the office of consciousness. Yet we do not object to the use of the common language on the subject. It is only when an undue advantage is taken of this language, and an attempt made to elevate it into a standard of absolute truth, that we feel called upon to enter our protest and to make the requisite philosophical discriminations. So far as mere consciousness is concerned it reports a body as truly in another life as in this, for it reports merely its sensations, and these we have shown to belong to the $\psi\psi\chi$, which lives after death.

in order to give a more precise direction to your researches let us state distinctly the point which is to be labored in the argument. Here are some eight, ten, twelve, or twenty bodies successively tenanted by the same inhabiting soul during life. These bodies, one or all, are to be brought into a relation of identity with some single body affirmed to be forthcoming at the period called "the last day." We demand in the first place that you distinctly inform us whether you assume to establish the identity of any one of the number with the resurrection-body, or of the whole. If you take the former alternative, then we ask which of the plurality you fix upon, and why that one rather than any of the rest. If the latter, then it is a fair requisition that you show clearly that the averments of Scripture require the belief, that the aggregate of all the bodies inhabited by the soul of any individual on earth shall be reproduced at the final consummation, and constitute thenceforward the residence of the soul to eternity.

We foresee at once that the solution of the problem will be referred to Omnipotence. God has expressly asserted that the body shall be raised, and he has infinite power to accomplish all he has announced. Therefore the body—the same body—shall be raised at the appointed time. But let it not be forgotten that the same God has endowed his creature man with an intelligence which assures him that more than one body inevitably enters into our conceptions of the matter, and it is utterly impossible to repress inquiry as to the true subject upon which his Omnipotence is to exert itself. While we are not at liberty to question for a moment the competency of infinite power to effect every thing to which it has pledged itself, we are not at the same time withheld from a humble inquisition into the terms of the proposition to which our faith is demanded. Light upon this head is all that we ask of the advocates of the common doctrine of the Resurrection. Omnipotence, it is affirmed, is engaged to accomplish something in respect to the resuscitation of the dead bodies of men. We simply ask to be informed what it is. We are conscious of no irreverence in propounding this query, nor do we admit that it is unreasonably urged upon the assertors of the common view of the doctrine. We cannot conceive that our credence is challenged to a particular doctrine of revelation but upon the ground of some specific meaning that is attached to the terms in which it is proposed. Our object is to ascertain this meaning. We have not as yet been so fortunate as to meet with any writer who has seen fit, while denying the soundness of our positions, to make any enunciation on this head that did not contrive, in some way, to evade the real point of the difficulty. By opposing an acknowledged ignorance of the mode, to the just demand for a clear statement of the fact, of an alleged relation between the present and the future body, and by falling back upon a vague resort to Omnipotence, they have uniformly managed to rid themselves of the responsibility of a categorical reply to the objections urged. Meanwhile there is no lack of intelligibility or emphasis in the language employed to characterize the presumption implied in the attempt to penetrate the cloud of darkening generalities with which the truth is so studiously enveloped. But nothing, we conceive, is eventually to be gained for the credit of Revelation by a course of proceeding which refuses to admit that the mode of the Resurrection is yet a mooted point in theology, or which would make the questioning of the received theory on that subject a virtual denial of the whole doctrine. A very slight acquaintance with the dogmatic history of the church is sufficient to evince, that conflicting views have never ceased to be entertained among divines, in regard to the mode of the fact, who have cordially received the inspired annunciation of the great and glorious fact itself.* We claim an entire freedom to discuss in extenso and salva fide

* See Appendix.

every thing pertaining to the Scripture disclosures of a future state, and if upon a strict exegesis of the word a sense of the language results which presents the doctrine under a new aspect, and makes the resurrection to be a resurrection, not of the same body at the end of the world, but of the same person at the end of life, we reclaim against this result's being considered as in any way undermining or impugning the essential truth which lies at the centre of the tenet, viz., that the man who dies is to live again and possess an immortal existence in a psychical body. This is the core of the resurrection-doctrine, and so long as this truth is held inviolate, all that is essential to the integrity of the dogma remains untouched. The retributive sanctions of the religion of Christ lose none of their force upon the view now advanced, and its accordance with the deductions of a rational psychology will have any other effect, with a liberal mind, than that of diminishing the weight of the evidence by which it is sustained. To all the impulses of the pious heart, moreover, it comes commended by the holding forth of an unbroken continuity of blissful and bodily being from the moment the eyes close in death onward through the eternal years. The comfortless theory of the sleep of the soul dies away upon this view, like the night-dream of a fevered brain when the morning beams proclaim the risen sun. The dense gloom that haunted the grave melts into glowing and genial light, and the regenerate soul awakes to a new fulness of joy in a richer assurance of the immortality that is destined to crown its hopes.

APPENDIX.

CONFLICTING VIEWS OF THE RESURRECTION.

[The following article is inserted from a pamphlet written by the Rev. Augustus Clissold, a clergyman of the N. J. Church, England, in answer to a Review contained in the "Preston Magazine" for Oct. 1, 1843. The portion extracted is in reply to the Reviewer's denunciation of Swedenborg's doctrine of the Resurrection, which is substantially the same with that arrived at in the present work. It is, however, transferred to our pages solely with the view of presenting the historical evidence of the great diversity of opinion entertained on the subject by divines of the highest name in the Church.]

'THE Reviewer says, Swedenborg states it to be the popular doctrine, that man will not live in the body after death before the last judgment; and the Reviewer adds, "This view, which is scriptural, he altogether rejects." Now, what does he reject? He rejects the doctrine that man lives in a material body after death; but so far from rejecting the doctrine that man lives in a spiritual body after death, the whole of this narrative maintains it, as any one may see, by consulting the work.

Swedenborg exposes the folly of those who say, that departed spirits are shut up in the centre of the earth, or flying about the universe; and the Reviewer says "these notions are inventions of Swedenborg." Now, so far from these being inventions of Swedenborg, a learned writer, Suicer, maintains that the former was the opinion of St. Basil; and Lord King, in his History of the Creed, that it was a doctrine common among many of the early fathers: it was also the opinion of Bishop Horsley, as any one may see in his Sermon upon Hades: it is the opinion of one of the most recent commentators on the Apocalypse, Mr. Govett; and both opinions are broached by Dr. Scott, whose works were printed at the Clarendon Press, Oxford. (Vol. vi. p. 43.) In fine, the doctrines have been very prevalent. That they are inventions of Swedenborg, is therefore an untruth.

But the Reviewer says, "the word of God represents the souls of the righteous, when absent from the body, as present with the Lord; and that to the righteous this separate state is highly desirable." We fully grant it; but why then does no less a theologian than Bishop Bull maintain, that as man is a complex of body and soul, so the body alone or the soul alone is neither of them man; that, consequently, in a separate state, the soul is only half a man, yearning for its other half? How can any person of common sense suppose that such a state is highly desirable? Look again to what Bishop Beveridge says in the article on the Resurrection of Christ. As death, he maintains, is the separation of soul and body, so after departure from this world, the soul is in a state of death as truly as the body—in a state of death, because in a state of separation—a state of which the soul is nevertheless conscious. Is THIS a state highly desirable?—half a being, and that half dead, nay, more, in a state of imprisonment, and this for thousands of years! Can we suppose that, to the righteous THIS separate state is highly desirable?

But we proceed more particularly to the doctrine of the resurrection, and request your serious attention to the remarks which follow. The Reviewer says, "The Scriptures at the same time, WITH ALL POSSIBLE PLAINNESS, assert that that very body which is laid in the grave, and which may for centuries moulder there, shall rise again, though in an incorruptible and very different state. Whatever inconceivable change may pass upon it, its identity will remain; and the body which is sown in corruption, is that which shall be raised in incorruption."

The former Magazine had said, "What in the name of common sense is to be raised, if not the body? Was the soul committed to the grave?" Thus, according to the writer, both common sense and Scripture assert, with all possible plainness, the resurrection of the identical body which is laid in the grave. By the identical body which is laid in the grave, Bishop Pearson understands the same numerical body; or the same numerical collection of parts; and this he says, he holds to be a necessary and infallible truth; so that, if to this we add, that the truth is the truth of common sense, that Scripture declares it with all possible plainness, the writers doubtless conceive they are holding fast, according to St. Paul, to the form of sound words which they have received. We now proceed to show from authorities in the Church of England, that so far from holding fast the words of St. Paul, they are holding fast only their own opinions; so far from their being the words of St. Paul, they are the words of unskilful theologians; so far from their being sound words, they are very unsound; so far from having been received from the apostle, they have been foisted upon him; so far from their being the words of Scripture, they are nowhere to be found in Scripture.

Bishop Pearson maintains, that if the same numerical body as that deposited in the grave be not raised, it ceases to be a resurrection; for that a resurrection is the rising again of that which has fallen, and that which has fallen is the body, by being let down or deposited in the grave. Therefore, that a resurrection means a resurrection of the same numerical parts, and that any thing short of this, is not a resurrection.

Now Macknight observes, that he will not contend for the resurrection of the very numerical body; nay, that the very numerical body is not raised: and the present Bishop of London quotes the remark with approbation. Mr. Hawkins, in his Bampton Lectures, will not insist upon the same numerical body; nor will Professor Lee; nor will Mr. Scott, in his Commentary on the Bible; and yet Keach maintains, with Bishop Pearson, that in order to be a resurrection, it must be a resurrection of the same numerical parts. ¶ We see then, that the necessary and infallible truth of the resurrection of the same numerical body begins to be abandoned, even by those who maintain the resurrection of the same body.

Let us next see what becomes of the doctrine of the resurrection of the same body.

The unbeliever, Thomas Paine, brought forward as a charge against the Bible, its maintaining the doctrine of the resurrection of the same body. Bishop Watson answered the charge in his well known work, entitled An Apology. How did the Bishop publicly meet the charge? Was it by maintaining the doctrine to be a necessary and infallible truth? Was it by appealing, like other divines, to the power of Omnipotence? No.

such thing; but by calling upon his infidel opponent, to show that any such doctrine is contained in Scripture. The Bishop falls back upon the position of Locke, and denies with him that any such doctrine is taught by St. Paul. Here, then, is a signal instance in which the doctrine, as professed by the Preston Magazine, shrank from before one of the most notorious infidels, and in which a Bishop of the Church of England challenges him to prove, that any such doctrine as is contained in the Magazine is contained in Scripture.

Take again, the instance of the celebrated Paley. Did Paley maintain the resurrection of the same body? On the contrary, he maintained, that the body with which we should rise, would be totally different—would be altered not only in quality, state, or condition, but in substance and in form. Now, how can a body totally different be one and the same? The Bishop of London admits that it cannot, and that he who maintains the body to be absolutely and totally different, cannot be said to maintain the resurrection of the same body. Thus does Paley throw aside the doctrine of the Preston Reviewer. Nay, further, so far from maintaining the resurrection of the same body to be a necessary and infallible truth, he declares the doctrine to be of no importance whatever. (Sermon 5.)

"But," says the Bishop of London, "I see no reason for departing from the doctrine of the early Church, that we shall rise again with our bodies, as it is asserted in the Athanasian, and implied in the Apostles' Creed; although we need not use that expression in the sense of asserting a resurrection of the same numerical collection of parts." This being the opinion of the Bishop of London, what says the late Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford, in the learned notes to his Bampton Lectures? Dr. Burton says, "It is nowhere asserted in the New Testament, that we shall rise again with our bodies." Bishop Newton is still more decisive upon the subject. In his Dissertation on the General Resurrection, he observes (p. 279): "As the corn which springeth up is not the very same seed that was sown, so thou mayest infer that the dead shall return to life, not with the same, but with other bodies than those which were buried. One would think that St. Paul had here said enough to convince any reasonable inquirer; but human curiosity will not rest so satisfied, and the same questions are still agitated, as if the apostle had not returned any answers to them. It may be proper, therefore, more at large to explain and enforce the apostle's meaning; and the sum and substance of all may be comprised in these few words, that the same persons shall rise again, but not with the same bodies, but with other bodies as it shall please God to give them," &c. Again, (p. 282,) "Justice requires that the same persons shall rise again, but not with the same bodies; for our bodies are not ourselves." Again, (p. 283,) "Anastasis, the word constantly used throughout the New Testament for the resurrection, signifies a rising again, a life after death, another state of the same person after the present; but never once, that I know of, signifies or even implies the resurrection of the same body." Again, (p. 287,) "St. Paul is, I think, the only one who hath treated purposely, and at large of the resurrection-body; and he is so far from defining it to be the same numerical body, that he describes it as of a totally different form and order. If those who contend for the resurrection of the same body, would consider a little what it is that constitutes the same body, they would be convinced of the difficulty, or rather the impossibility, of that identical body ever rising again." Lastly, (p. 292,) "What occasion is there for so many debates and controversies, so many solutions and explications of the difficulties attending the resurrection of the same body; when the Scripture proposeth no such article to our belief. * * * So far is the Scripture from asserting the resurrection of the same body, that, on the contrary, plain intimations are given that the body shall not be the same. Nothing can be clearer and stronger to this purpose than the declaration of St. Paul. "Thou sowest not that body that shall be."

Thus we see how the doctrine of the resurrection of the same body gradually dwindles down from a necessary infallible truth into an unscriptural dogma. Bishop Pearson maintains the resurrection of the same numerical body to be as we have said, a necessary and infallible truth. Macknight maintains the resurrection of the same body, but not the resurrection of the same numerical body. Scott maintains the resurrection of the same body, which yet he thinks will not be the same, but alterum et idem, another body yet the same, which Bishop Newton says is nonsense. The Bishop of London maintains the resurrection of the same body, which Paley says, nevertheless, will be totally different; upon the whole, the Bishop says, he sees no objection to the words, "we shall rise again with our bodies," a doctrine, which Dr. Burton says, is nowhere to be found in the New Testament.

And what is the history of this doctrine? Originally, in the Nicene Creed, the article was introduced of a resurrection of the dead; this was altered, in the Apostles' Creed to a resurrection of the body; this again was altered by some of the fathers, into a resurrection of the flesh: the Bishop of London says, this was altered again by our own Church, into the safer form of a resurrection of the body; and Bishop Newton intimates, it ought to be altered back again into the original form of a resurrection of the dead; observing, "It is earnestly to be wished that all creeds were framed, as much as may be convenient, in the words, or at least perfectly agreeable to the sense of Scripture." (p. 294, v. 6.)

And now, after the foregoing remarks, what becomes of the Reviewer's positive assertion, that "the Scriptures, with all possible plainness, assert that that very body which is laid in the grave, and which may for centuries moulder there, shall rise again, though in an incorruptible and very different state"? But let us proceed to another text alleged in proof of the doctrine, "The hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they ~~that~~ have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that ~~have~~ done evil to the resurrection of damnation." This text, the Reviewer tells us, is "most strong, pointed, and specific." He puts it forward as if it were able of itself to sustain the doctrine of the resurrection of the same material body, to silence all the gainsayers in the New Church, and to cover them with shame and confusion. What now becomes of this passage? Why, of this very text, the present Bishop of London observes, "I do not lay much stress upon our Saviour's words, which are urged by Witsius, in proof of a resurrection of the same body, the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice!" (Sermons, Notes.) How can this be, if the text is so strong, nay, further, most strong, and pointed? Yet the learned prelate will not lay much stress upon it! Why not? Another prelate, Bishop Newton, may perhaps explain the matter in the Dissertation already mentioned. (Vol. vi. p. 285.)

"In the New Testament, though the doctrine of the general resurrection is so much insisted upon, and such frequent mention is made of the resurrection of the dead, yet we nowhere read of the resurrection of the same body. Our Saviour saith, (John, v. 28,) 'All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth;' and what are in the graves but the dead bodies? But if this is any proof of the resurrection of the body, it proveth too much, that the dead bodies can hear and come forth without their souls; for I presume it will hardly be said that the souls are in the graves too. It will also prove that the very same bodies, whether swollen with dropsies or wasted by consumptions, shall come forth in the same form and manner as they are laid in the graves. All that are in the graves, is nothing more than a periphrasis for the dead, they who have done good, and they who have done evil, which cannot possibly be applied to dead bodies."

So says Bishop Newton. Thus we have two eminent Bishops of the Church of England giving up this text as a proof of the resurrection of the same body; and yet the Reviewer continues to urge it, as if none but members of the New Church had ever thought of calling it in question as an authority for the resurrection of the same body; and as if they were consequently "profane and vain babblers, mischievous and destructive teachers." But is it not an awful state of the Church to find, upon this most solemn subject, one divine declaring the resurrection of the same body, as Witsius, to be the one grand hope and consolation of the Christian; another divine, as Bishop Pearson, declaring it to be a necessary and infallible truth; another divine, as Bishop Bull, resting upon it the whole doctrine of eternal happiness in heaven: and then to find other divines, equally eminent in learning and station, giving a flat contradiction to these statements, and challenging these theologians to prove that any such doctrine is to be found in the Bible? There are many, alas! who call themselves Christians, who give but little heed to these things, in consequence of going after the god of this world; but can you think that to those who desire to work out their salvation, this state of things in the Church is a matter of no consequence? Or can you wonder that it should have deeply affected many reflecting minds, and caused them to receive the doctrines of a New Church, in which they are satisfied there are no such contradictions; in which they perceive both certainty and clearness; and which, consequently, they regard as most consolatory?

"But," says the Reviewer, "the time when the resurrection is to take place is also marked out. It is to be when the trumpet shall sound, and when all who are found living upon earth shall be changed, as well as all the dead arise;" and the Reviewer says, "this cannot possibly agree with the notions of Swedenborg's disciples." I admit that they give quite another interpretation to the passage from the one commonly received. Hervey, and many other divines, describe the blast of the trumpet to be louder than ten thousand thunders, so very loud as to wake the dead; though it is difficult to conceive how those whose organs of hearing have to be formed, should be able to hear without them—how intensity of noise will compensate for utter insensibility to it. But not only is the noise assumed to be indescribably loud, but the dimensions of the instrument sounded are often conceived to be of proportionable extent. The Mahomedans believed, that because at the last day the deeds of men would be weighed in a balance, there would be an enormous pair of scales, stretching from over the regions of Paradise to the place over the regions of hell. But, as Mr. Sale observes, "some are willing to understand what is said in the Koran concerning this balance allegorically, and only as a figurative representation of God's equity; yet the more ancient and orthodox opinion is, that they are to be taken literally." In the present case, a most ancient and orthodox opinion is, that the trumpet is to be a literal trumpet; and in this case, well may Dr. Tilloch and other divines regard this literal rendering of the words as pure, unmixed nonsense. Here again, then, in the old Church, the inquiring Christian is baffled and put to a stand. He is told the trumpet shall sound. What trumpet? for the Apocalypse speaks of seven trumpets. St. Paul says, the last trumpet. According to commentators, six of the trumpets have sounded for a long time. Has the Reviewer, has any one else heard any of them? Besides, under this last trumpet, there are two resurrections; one described as taking place a thousand years before the other;—which of these resurrections does the Reviewer mean? When he says the time is distinctly marked out, we ask, which time? for there are two distinct times specified; with a difference of a thousand years between them. St. Paul is universally admitted to refer only to the resurrection of the saints; the resurrection of the saints in the Apocalypse, is the first resurrection, and I know of scarcely a single commentator who agrees with the Reviewer in saying, that this is the time when all the dead shall arise. It is notorious that the whole subject is involved in inextricable difficulties. Still I acknowledge that a large number of divines, and with them Christians in general, have a very easy way of escaping, and that is, by putting aside the Apocalypse altogether. The Reviewer charges us with adding to the Word of God ; but how can they who neglect the Apocalypse escape the charge of taking away from the Word of God ? No man can read the explanations of the Apocalypse which have been published of late years, even by divines of the Church of England, without frequently meeting with charges against their own order of virtually taking away from the Word of God, in consequence of their leaving out the Apocalypse altogether, and hence being blind to the signs of the times—reckless of the warnings given to the Church—and crying peace, peace, when there is no peace.’

A CATALOGUE OF BOOKS,
PUBLISHED BY J. S. REDFIELD, CLINTON HALL, N. Y.

AND FOR SALE BY MOST BOOKSELLERS IN THE UNITED STATES.

THE PICTORIAL BIBLE,

Price Five Dollars.

THE Pictorial Bible, being the Old and New Testaments, according to the authorized version: illustrated with more than one thousand engravings, representing the Historical Events after celebrated pictures: the Landscape Scenes from original drawings or from authentic engravings: and the subjects of Natural History, Costume, and Antiquities, from the best sources. With an elegantly engraved Family Record, and a new and authentic Map of Palestine.

"We have seldom seen a more attractive work, and have no doubt that the cost of the enterprise will be sustained by a large circulation."

N. Y. Evangelist.

"The type is fair and handsome, and the engravings are select and executed remarkably well. They are so numerous and good, as to be in themselves a commentary."—Christian Reflector.

"Its abundant and beautiful illustrations adapt it for a Family Bible, and will make it highly interesting to the young."—Christian Register.

"It is a superb publication."—Zion's Herald.

"The engravings are executed in a fine style of the art, and the paper and the type are all that the most fastidious eye could require."—Hierophant.

THE PICTORIAL NEW TESTAMENT,

Price One Dollar and Fifty Cents.

THE PICTORIAL NEW TESTAMENT, AND THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

Price Two Dollars.

BOOKS PUBLISHED BY J. S. REDFIELD.

CALVINISTIC FAMILY LIBRARY

The following are the publications of the "Calvinistic Book Concern" for which J. S. R. is agent for the Eastern States. The volume all full bound in sheep. Price Three Dollars each.

VOLUME ONE,

Was published in quarto size, and contains the following works
A SERIES OF LECTURES DELIVERED IN LIME STREET, LONDON
IN 1732:

A COMPLETE BODY OF DIVINITY, BY HERMAN WITSIUS, D.D.; AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF THE PROPHECIES, BY RICHARD HURD, D.D.;

AND AN ESSAY ON THE PROPHECY OF ZACHARIAS, BY THE LATE JOHN VENN, M.A.;

VOLUME SECOND.

LIVES OF THE SCOTTISH REFORMERS

BY THE LATE THOMAS MCCRIE, D.D.

Containing the Lives of Knox and Melville, together with a Memoir of William Veltch, written by himself;

AND NARRATIVES OF

THE RISING AT BOTHWELL AND PENTLAND, WITH AN HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION,
BY THE AMERICAN EDITOR.

VOLUME THIRD.

LECTURES ON THEOLOGY

BY THE LATE JOHN DICK.

PUBLISHED UNDER THE SUPERINTENDENCE OF HIS SON, WITH A BIOGRAPHICAL INTRODUCTION,
BY THE AMERICAN EDITOR.

VOLUME FOURTH.

A TREATISE ON THE HOLY SPIRIT AND HIS OPERATIONS.

AND AN

EXPOSITION OF THE 130TH PSALM
BY JOHN OWEN, D.D.

VOLUME FIFTH.

LIFE AND PRACTICAL WORK

OF THE

REV. RALPH ERSKINE, A.M.,

TO BE COMPLETED IN THREE VOLUMES.

From the Glasgow Edition of 1777.

BOOKS PUBLISHED BY J. S. REDFIELD.

Prof. Bush's Psychological Works.

PROFESSOR BUSH ON "THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST:

In answer to the Question whether he rose in a Spiritual or Celestial, or in a Material and Earthly Body:"

BY GEORGE BUSH,

PROFESSOR OF HEBREW IN THE NEW YORK UNIVERSITY.

Published in pamphlet form. Price 25 cents.

"This pamphlet contains the substance of a lecture delivered by the author, in reply to strictures on his work, made in one of the pulpits of New York. We have read it with interest, and commend it to the attention of those who are inquiring for truth on this subject."—Christian Observer.

"The author of this pamphlet belongs to the orthodox school of divines, and enjoys a high position and honorable distinction, among them. He has won for himself a still more honorable distinction, however, by the ardent love of truth, and the fearlessness in promulgating novel and unwelcome doctrines, which he has manifested in the pamphlet above named."—Trumpet.

PROFESSOR BUSH ON THE SOUL.

The Soul, or an inquiry into Scriptural Psychology, as developed by the use of the terms

SOUL, SPIRIT, LIFE, ETC.

VIEWED IN ITS BEARINGS ON THE DOCTRINE OF THE RESURRECTION.

BY GEORGE BUSH,

PROFESSOR OF HEBREW IN THE NEW YORK UNIVERSITY.

Price 50 cents.

DEBATE ON UNIVERSALISM.

By Rev. E. M. PINGREE, of the Universalist Church, and N. L. RICE, of the Presbyterian Church.

One vol., 12mo. Price $1.00.

* * This great debate was held in the Cincinnati Tabernacle, and was attended by an immense audience.

THE BICENTENARY

Of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, held at Edinburgh, July 12 and 13, 1843; containing a full and authentic report of the addresses and conversations, with an Introductory Sermon by Rev. Dr. Symington. Published under the sanction of the Assembly.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION TO THE AMERICAN EDITION,

BY REV. WILLIAM WILSON.

One volume. Price 75 cents.

BOOKS PUBLISHED BY J. S. REDFIELD.

New Books by N. P. Willis, Esq.

DASHES AT LIFE—PART I.

CONTAINING,
HIGH LIFE IN EUROPE, AND AMERICAN LIFE.

Price 50 cents.

DASHES AT LIFE—PART II.

The second part of Mr. Willis's "Dashes at Life," containing the whole and the only complete edition of

INKLINGS OF ADVENTURE,

in a style uniform with the complete edition of Mr. Willis's works

Price 50 cents.

DASHES AT LIFE—PART III.

The third part of "Dashes at Life:" contains the LOITERINGS AND JOURNEYINGS OF TRAVEL, and numerous other Tales and Sketches never before published in this country.

Price 50 cents.

E P H E M E R A,

A collection of the "Jottings Down," and other miscellaneous articles from the pen of Mr. Willis, now for the first time collected and published, uniform with his other works.

In two parts—Price 50 cents each.

THE PROSE AND POETICAL WORKS

OF

N. P. WILLIS.

Complete in one volume, octavo.

* * This volume contains everything written by Mr. Willis up to the present time.

THE MIRROR LIBRARY.

EDITED BY

GEORGE P. MORRIS, AND N. P. WILLIS.

Complete in one octavo volume, Price $5.00.

BOOKS PUBLISHED BY J. S. REDFIELD.

STANDARD POETICAL WORKS.

THE POETICAL WORKS
OF PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

EDITED BY G. G. FOSTER.

THE FIRST COMPLETE AMERICAN EDITION.

In one volume, 16mo.

"Shelley has a private nook in my affections. He is no unlike all other poets that I can not mate him. He is like his own 'skylark' among birds. He does not keep ever up in the thin air with Byron, like the eagle, nor sing with Keats low and sweetly like the thrush, nor, like the dove sitting always upon her nest, brood with Wordsworth over the affections. He begins to sing when, the morning wakes him, and as he grows wild with his own song, he mounts upward, and it is wonderful how he loses himself, like the delirious bird in the sky, and with a verse which may be well compared for its fine delicacy with her little wings, penetrates its far depths fearlessly and full of joy. There is something very new in this mingled trait of fineness and sublimity. Milton and Byron seem made for the sky. Their broad wings always strike the air with the same solemn majesty. But Shelley, near the ground, is a very 'bird in a bower,' running through his merry compass as if he never dreamed of the upward and invisible heavens. Withal, Shelley's genius is too fiery to be moody. He was a melancholy man, but it was because he was crossed in the daily walk of life, and such anxieties did not touch his imagination. It was above—far, far above them. His poetry was not, like that of other poets, linked with his common interests; and if it 'unbound the serpent of care from his heart,' as doubtless it did, it was by making him forget that it was there. He conceived and wrote in a wizard circle. The illiberal world was the last thing remembered, and its annoying prejudices gail him as they might in the exercise of his social duties, never followed over the fiery limit of his fancy. Never have we seen such pure abstraction from earthliness as in the temper of his poetry. It is the clear, intellectual lymph, unalloyed and unpolluted."—N. P. Willis.

'And singing ever soars, and soaring ever singeth;'

THE POETICAL WRITINGS
OF ELIZABETH OAKES SMITH.

FIRST COMPLETE EDITION.

Neatly bound in muslin, gilt edges.

Price 42 cents.

THE SNOW-DROP,

A GIFT FOR A FRIEND.

EDITED BY THE REV. C. W. EVEREST.

Price 37½ cents.

BOOKS PUBLISHED BY J. S. REDFIELD.

W. F. P. NAPIER, C.B., COL. 43D REG., &c.

HISTORY OF THE WAR IN THE PENINSULA, AND IN THE SOUTH OF FRANCE,
FROM THE YEAR 1807 TO 1814.

Complete in one vol., 8vo. Price Three Dollars.

"NAPIER'S history is regarded by the critics as one of the best narratives that has recently been written. His style is direct, forcible, and impetuous, carrying the reader along often in spite of himself, through scenes of the most stirring interest and adventures full of excitement. Many of the most distinguished and remarkable men of European history figure in these pages, and are sketched with great distinctness of outline. Napoleon, Wellington, Sir John Moore, Ney, Murat, and others, are the characters of the drama which Napier describes."—Evening Mirror.

"We believe the Literature of War has not received a more valuable augmentation this century than Col. Napier's justly celebrated work. Though a gallant combatant in the field, he is an impartial historian; he exposes the errors committed on each side, refutes many tales of French atrocity and rapine, and does not conceal the revolting scenes of drunkenness, pillage, ravishment, and wanton slaughter, which tarnished the lustre of the British arms in those memorable campaigns. We think no civilian chronicler of the events of this desperate contest has been so just to the adversary of his nation as has this stern warrior."—Tribune.

"NAPIER'S History, in addition to its superior literary merits and truthful fidelity, presents strong claims upon the attention of all American citizens; because the author is a large-souled philanthropist, and an inflexible enemy to its ecclesiastical tyranny and secular despots; while his pictures of Spain, and his portrait of the rulers in that degraded and wretched country, form a virtual sanction of our Republican institutions, far more powerful than any direct eulogy."—Post.

"THE excellency of Napier's History results from the writer's happy talent for impetuous, straight forward, soul-stirring narrative and picturing forth of characters. The military manœuvre, march, and fiery onset, the whole whirlwind vicissitudes of the desperate fight, he describes with dramatic force."—Merchants' Magazine.

"THE reader of Napier's History finds many other attractions, besides the narrative of battles, marches, plunder, ravages, sieges, skirmishes, and slaughter—for he learns the dreadful evils of a despotic government—the inherent corruption of the entire system of European monarchies—the popular wretchedness which ever accompanies the combination of a lordly, hierarchical tyranny with the secular authority, and the assurance that the extinction of both are essential to the peace and welfare of mankind. All these lessons are derived from Napier's History, which, in connexion with its literary excellence, and the accuracy of its details, render all other recommendations utterly superfluous. It is a large, neat, and cheap volume."—L. I. Star.

EDWARD GIBBON.

HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL
OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE;

A new edition, revised and corrected throughout, preceded by a Preface, and accompanied by Notes, critical and historical, relating principally to the propagation of Christianity. By M. F. GUIZOT, Minister of Public Instruction of France.

In two vols., 8vo. Price Five Dollars.

BOOKS PUBLISHED BY J. S. REDFIELD.

THE PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

AMERICAN REVOLUTION,

With a Sketch of the Early History of the Country, Constitution of the United States, a Chronological Index, and the Declaration of Independence, with the Fac-Similes of the Signatures, Washington's Farewell Address, &c., &c.

ILLUSTRATED WITH SEVERAL HUNDRED ENGRAVINGS.

In 6 vol., 8vo. Price $3 00.

"This volume is well adapted to attract the attention of youth to that necessary department of historical knowledge, the revolutionary annals of our own country. It contains, in addition to all the other cuts, maps, plans, and portraits, the fac-simile signatures of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence; and the Constitution of the United States. It will be found to contain a large mass of authentic information—and its pictorial embellishments will keep noisy children quiet, and mischievous boys employed; hence it is a capital family book."—Christian Intelligencer.

"As a reading-book for schools it is very valuable."—Teachers' Manual.

E. REGNAULT.

CRIMINAL HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH GOVERNMENT,

FROM THE FIRST MASSACRE OF THE IRISH TO THE POISONING OF THE CHINESE.

In one volume, 12mo. Price 75 cents.

"This book seems to be a careful and diligent collection of all the outrages perpetrated by the British Government on the lives of those who have stood in the way of its ambition: the catalogue is certainly most formidable, and calculated to impress the reader with a thorough detestation of cruelty, even when shielded by authority and inflicted by absolute power. Whether it leaves a proper and true impression of English character, may be doubted; but it exhibits at least one side of the picture with ability and in colors of startling vividness. The work is now first translated from the French by an American."—Tribune.

"The work is exceedingly well compiled, and no family in this country should be without it, as it will not only enlighten the present but teach the rising generations to justly abhor any connexion with a country which owes its existence only to its inhumanity."—Irish Vol.

CHARLES ROLLIN.

THE ANCIENT HISTORY

OF

The Carthaginians, Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes and Persians, Grecians, and Macedonians; including a History of the Arts and Sciences of the Ancients. With a Life of the Author, by James Bell.

Two vols., 8vo. Price Five Dollars.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN LAWYER;

OR THE

CLERK AND MAGISTRATE'S
ASSISTANT:

Adapted to the Revised Statutes of the State of New York, and greatly enlarged. By a gentleman of the Bar. Tenth edition.

One vol., 12mo., law sheep. Price $1 50.

BOOKS PUBLISHED BY J. S. REDFIELD.

Books for Sabbath Schools.

THE EARLY LIFE OF CHRIST, AN EXAMPLE TO YOUTH.

BY HENRY MARCH.

WITH A PREFACE AND INDEX BY AN AMERICAN PREACHER

One vol., 18mo. Price 20 cents.

EASTERN ARTS AND ANTIQUITIES

REPRINTED FROM THE LAST LONDON EDITION.

WITH 180 ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price 75 cents.

BIBLE QUADRUPEDS.

ILLUSTRATED WITH 16 SPLENDID ENGRAVINGS

Price 75 cents.

THE

CHILD'S PRAYER AND HYMN BOOK FOR THE USE OF FAMILIES AND SCHOOLS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MAMMA'S BIBLE STORIES."

Price 31 cents.

"It should be in the hands of every mother."—Lady's Companion.

"To bring up a child properly teach them early to pray."—Sabbath School Monitor.

"Full of fervent piety."—Christian Intelligencer.

J. HEINRICH ZSCHOKKE, HOURS OF MEDITATION AND DEVOTIONAL REFLECTION,

ON THE

RELIGIOUS, MORAL, AND SOCIAL DUTIES OF LIFE.

Translated by James D. Haas.

In one vol., 12mo. Price 50 cents.

"For purity of sentiment, elevated and ennobling reflection, and Christian earnestness, we have met with nothing for a long time that pleased us so well. The original work from which the Essays have been selected 'Die Studien der Undacht,' has had an immense circulation in Germany Switzerland, having reached a twenty-third edition—in all more than 300 copies."—Tribune.

"The style is simple, earnest, and the tone of the work that of a high spiritual Christianity, such as we believe to be, all outer garments and pediments removed, the hidden secrets of the power alike of the Roman Catholic and the Reformed Churches. Certain we are that this work others like it, coming from a truly honest man, who has derived his wisdom from his own life, may be read with profit by every sincere religious man by whatever name he calls himself."—Morning News.

"We have perused this volume of miscellaneous Essays with much satisfaction. The subjects are neither trite, nor discussed in a commonplace manner. The author is a sagacious inspector, not only of the great world without but also of the 'little world within.'"—Evening Post.

BOOKS PUBLISHED BY J. S. REDFIELD.

MINIATURE LIBRARY EDITIONS;

NEATLY BOUND IN MUSLIN, GILT EDGES.

•.THINK! ACT! PRAY!

SECOND AMERICAN FROM THE TWENTIETH LONDON EDITION.

Price 31 cents.

"'Think! Act! Pray!' a little work written by a plain, self-instructed invalid, for the benefit of those who never rightly think."—Amer. Traveller.

RELIGIOUS LACON, OR HOLY THOUGHTS,

Selected from various authors, by Rev. Joseph Jones of Newchurch, Eng.

Price 31 cents.

"THE 'Religious Lacon,' is a selection of terse and impressive remembrances from the best English theologians; a little book which should always be at hand; as a memento, and a treasure, whence to snatch a good and improving thought amid the bustle and snares of life."—Christian Intelligencer.

THOUGHTS AMONG FLOWERS; WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

A republication of the London Religious Tract Society.

Price 31 cents.

THE LANGUAGE OF LOVE, WITH HINTS ON COURTSHIP.

Price 31 cents.

NAPOLEON'S MAXIMS OF WAR,

Translated by Col. D'Aguilar.

WITH NOTES.

In one vol., 32mo. Price 50 cents.

"THE science of war, in its legitimate sense, is entitled to encouragement, and study, and we recommend that every man of military mind, should possess himself of a copy of 'Napoleon's Maxims.' The work is also one of interest to the general reader, containing, as it does, numerous brief historical facts connected with the most celebrated battles, and men of military renown of almost every age."—Recruit.

"It is a work of no little interest to those who wish to understand the principles upon which the greatest captain of the age carried on his operations, and who also desire to understand the errors committed by the inferior intellects brought into the field against him."—Penn. Inquirer.

"THIS work appears in its first American edition, with a recommendation from Gen. Scott, speaking of its utility to military men. That, indeed, is apparent enough; but it has occurred to us that the perusal of the little work, with its full illustrative notes, must be of great advantage also to the general reader, who desires to understand the tactics of the great Emperor. It will be a good companion to Thiers' History, now publishing."—U. S. Sat. Post.

BOOKS PUBLISHED BY J. S. REDFIELD.

KNOWLEDGE FOR THE PEOPLE.

RE-ISSUE OF THE PENNY MAGAZINE.

4000 IMPERIAL OCTAVO PAGES.

2000 ENGRAVINGS!!

A COMPLETE LIBRARY WITHIN ITSELF.

THE London Penny Magazine, issued under the direction of the "Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge," is, unquestionably, one of the most entertaining and useful of all the popular works which has ever appeared in any age, or in any language. Its pages embrace every subject in the wide field of human knowledge, and as every article, whether on Science, History, Biography, Literature, or the Arts, passed the careful scrutiny and critical ordeal of an able committee of learned men, the work may be placed in the hands of the youth of the country without danger or distrust. The popularity of the work in England may be judged of from the fact that during the first year of its publication of the monthly parts were disposed of. In the United States too, the work has acquired no inconsiderable popularity, though it has not heretofore been presented to the American public in such a manner as to insure a universal circulation. The numerous abortive imitations of it, however, which have appeared from time to time, prove at once the great value of the work, and the great difficulty and immense expense of successfully accomplishing such an enterprise.

MORE THAN 80,000 COPIES

The undersigned having purchased the Stereotype plates, with the Engravings, of the London edition of the above-named work, has commenced its republication in the city of New York. The whole work consists of about 4000 large imperial octavo pages, and is illustrated with 2000 Engravings. The original cost of the Stereotyping and Engraving to the London publishers, was $25,000. The American Re-issue is printed on good paper, and well done up in handsome paper covers, and issued in 24 PARTS, AT 25 CENTS EACH.

The Parts average 170 pages each, and are published every other Saturday. It is an exact reprint of the London edition, without alteration or abridgment.

The work is sold by all dealers in Books and cheap Literature, throughout the United States. Persons wishing to obtain it regularly on its issue, will do well to hand in their names to some Bookseller in their neighborhood, at as early a day as possible. Postmasters will be entitled to ten numbers for Two Dollars.

BOOKS PUBLISHED BY J. S. REDFIELD.

A BOOK ADDRESSED TO THOSE WHO THINK.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED
RESEARCHES AND OBSERVATIONS ON SCROFULOUS DISEASES;

BY J. G. A. LUGOL,

PHYSICIAN TO THE HOSPITAL ST. LOUIS, &C., &C.

Translated from the French,

BY A. SIDNEY DOANE, A.M., M.D.

One vol. 12mo. Price One Dollar.

THE present work has been composed at the close of a brilliant and successful medical career of more than thirty years' duration, throughout which M. Lugol has almost exclusively directed his attention to the intricate and extensive subject of scrofulous disease. To naturally strong and untiring powers of observation he has added opportunities of prosecuting his investigations, such as rarely fall to the lot of one individual. He has been now more than twenty years physician to an institution which, from its size and number of inmates, may be said to resemble a town rather than an hospital; and in this extensive field he has had the superintendence of one hundred and fifty beds, constantly filled with all possible varieties of scrofulous disease.

The out-patient department also of the Hospital St. Louis is inconceivably extensive; pitiable and loathsome objects, of all ages and degrees of infirmity, there daily crowd around him for the benefit of an experience which is only equalled by his urbanity and kindness of heart. In addition to this, M. Lugol has for thirty years enjoyed one of the most extensive private practices in Paris; he has there long been the chief authority upon the subject of scrofula, and has numbered among his patients the wealthy and titled classes of every European country. The observations, therefore, which he commenced among the poor have been re-observed among the rich; and, he has ascertained that they are both in an equal degree amenable to the great curse of civilized nations, and neither the luxury of the one nor the misery of the other is able to effect any important modification in its manifestations.

With such opportunities of study, it is scarcely necessary to urge upon the reader the importance which should be attached to the opinions announced in his book; they are the opinions of perhaps the only man in Europe who is capable of doing justice to a subject of such immense interest as is that of the causes of scrofulous diseases.

Dr. A. Sidney Doane, the American translator of Lugol, enjoyed the opportunity of seeing this illustrious man at his own hospital, and having been too for three years at the head of the large hospital of the Lazaretto of the port of New York, has had ample opportunity of verifying many of the statements of Lugol, while his extensive translations from the French which have been received extremely well, afford a guarantee of the correctness of the American version.

Of all the diseases to which mankind are subject, none is more common, more fatal, or more generally overlooked, than Scrofula. Considered in its fullest extent, it is said to affect in a greater or less degree nearly one half of the human race, which is so peculiarly marked as to constitute almost a specific variety of the human species.

It commences its ravages even before birth, causing many of the spontaneous miscarriages to which females are subject, and after birth, it causes many diseases, the true sources of which have until recently been overlooked. In early infancy the children of scrofulous parents are liable to much suffering and danger. The process of Teething which generally progresses well with the children of healthy parents, causes much anxiety and difficulty in the scrofulous infant, and causes in them fits and eruptions of the skin. A year or two later and the child becomes affected with Worms. The eyes become sore, the ears discharge, and the glands or kernels are perceived under the arms, in the throat, &c. Scrofula causes also Whitewelling, and is a common cause of Dropsy of the Brain.

1775-29

Every one knows that Consumption is considered the pest, the plague-spot of America. Scarcely a family escapes its fatal ravages, and nearly every one can call to mind some near dear friend or relative who has been cut off by this fatal and sleepless malady, and yet how few refer it to its true cause, Scrofula. How little, too, is a scrofulous affection considered in forming that most important of all earthly connexions, the marriage tie. How little regard is paid to the health of those who embark together upon the great voyage of life, and whose good or bad constitution will exercise an important influence upon their offspring; for scrofula is a disease which can be inherited, and which is transmissible from parents to children. There are many persons who enjoy a tolerable degree of health, but who have been subject, in childhood, to enlarged glands, sore eyes, or some other forms of scrofula. These persons do not hesitate to marry, and yet according to Lugol they are seldom in a condition to have a healthy progeny. Lugol too considers early marriages to be a fruitful source of the propagation of scrofulous diseases, and so too with those who are more advanced in life. A long chapter, p. xiv.

Considered in these different lights, "Lugol's Researches" is the most important book which has been issued for many years from the American press. And if it be read faithfully, and its directions regarded, it can not but be of immense benefit to the American people. To guard against an evil or to provide a remedy for it, its nature must first be fully understood. The evils of scrofula are fully discussed in Lugol, which can not be circulated too extensively.

A long chapter is devoted to the consideration of the important subject of the marriage of scrofulous subjects. The author believes that married life is highly detrimental in scrofula, and adduces many instances, more particularly of females, in which the scrofulous predisposition, which had until then lain dormant, was called into activity by the circumstances incidental to that condition.

The unhappy state of the married scrofulous female is described in this chapter, with a fidelity which can not fail to bring to the recollection of the reader many instances among his own acquaintances. Sterility, which has been faithfully discussed by Mondat (on Sterility, published by J. S. Redfield), and its accompaniments of vexation and envy, is the lot of some; repeated abortions, inability to nurse, and the death one after the other of a sickly race of infants, is the prospect of others; in all, a life which might have been tolerable in celibacy, is rendered by marriage a period of sorrow and suffering.

That a matrimonial connexion should not be formed by a person predisposed to scrofula, without deep deliberation, is admitted by every one; but few are to be found; unfortunately, who will hesitate when the question is one which regards either themselves or their relations. Human nature and selfishness are inseparable, and if man will seek gratification even at the risk of his own health or life, it can not be expected that he will be deterred from the pursuit of it by any considerations having reference to beings yet unborn.

NOV 19 2002

3 2044 069 629 855

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
BUSH, George							Call Number
AUTHOR							BT
The soul; or, an in-							741
TITLE							.B8
quiry into scriptural

